PARALYSIS EPIDEMIC GROWS

Fifty Per Cent. Shortage in Attendance at Some of Lower Schools; Parents Fear Disease

With a falling off in attendance ranging from 10 to 50 per cent. in the lower grades, and considerably less in the higher, the Boston schools opened today.

Coincident with the opening came the announcement that twenty-two new cases of infantile paralysis were reported in Boston for the forty-eight-hour period ending at 9 o'clock today.

This breaks all previous records. The epidemic apparently is at its height in the city and thousands of parents refused to subject their children to what they believe unnecessary risks by sending them to school. They are not required to do so, Superintendent Dyer having stated that attendance is voluntary.

Adele Bonner, four months, daughter of Stephen Bonner of Mill street, Beverly, died today at the home of her parents from infantile paralysis. She had been ill twenty-four hours.

Eva E. Stark, three, of No. 236 Boston street, Lynn, died at the Lynn Contagious Hospital today of infantile paralysis, following an illness of three days.

The Bell Rock Primary School in Lynn was closed today for two weeks when it was found that Russell Noonan of Michigan avenue, Lynn, who is suffering from infantile paralysis, had a sister who has been attending the school.

AVERAGE FALLING OFF.

Official Boston school figures will not be known for several days. Judging from those already obtained, the falling off in attendance for the lower grades for the entire city will probably be about 25 per cent.

The attendance in the high schools appears to be about normal. The upper grammar grades report but slight losses.

Hyde Park and East Boston, where the disease has been prevalent, showed a marked decrease in attendance. In Hyde Park there were but practically half the pupils of last year. In certain parts of East Boston the attendance showed a decrease of from 25 to 50 per cent.

The State health authorities announced that thirty-four new cases had been reported to them for the forty-eight hours ending at 9 a. m., and that twenty-two of these cases were in Boston.

This is the largest total for any two days since the epidemic began in Boston, and the plague is at its height in this city.

Nevertheless the schools opened today.

The forty school physicians were

EPIDEMIC WORST IN STATE HISTORY

That the present epidemic of infantile paralysis is the worst in the history of the State is revealed by the official figures issued today by the State Department of Health.

A total of 1052 cases have been reported in the Bay State since January 1. This is 129 cases more than were reported in the epidemic of 1909. As the list of cases for today shows that the plague has by no means abated, it is estimated that the 1909 record will be broken by several hundred.

The figures issued by the State Department of Health shows these cases in previous years:

1909	923	1913	361
1910	845	1914	151
1911	232	1915	135
1912	169	1916 to date	1,052

The cases in the present epidemic occurred as follows:

January 1 to July 1	30	September	628
July	107	October	34
August	253

The thirty-four cases reported for the forty-eight hour period up to 9 a. m. today were:

NEW YORK STRIKE CALLED FAILURE

New York, Oct. 2.—Just before the meeting here today of labor leaders to act on the sympathetic strike movement, it was generally believed that the walkout in behalf of the traction men would be declared off.

Officials of the Amalgamated Association of Street Railway Employes declared that even if the sympathetic strike were called off, they would "go it alone." The attempt to tie up New York industrially has proved a complete failure.

U-BOAT SINKS 2 SHIPS IN ARCTIC

London, Oct. 2.—German submarines are active again and several more steamships, mostly neutral, have been torpedoed, according to today's dispatches.

Copenhagen reports that the Norwegian steamers Simen and Havn have been sunk by German submarines.

It is not known whether these are the ones referred to in the Christiania dispatch.

YICHY GAMBLERS WANT BAN LIFTED

Paris, Oct. 2.—The Municipal Council of Vichy has decided to take steps to have raised the embargo on gambling at the Casino there. DISCOVERY MAY SAVE BROKER

Attorney for Small Says It Is Possible Alleged Wife Murderer Will Be Freed After Hearing

Mountain View, N. H., Oct. 2.—A hammer, found today in a rowboat on the shore of Lake Ossipee, near the spot when Frederick L. Small's cottage stood, may throw an entirely new light on the murder of Mrs. Small, it developed this afternoon.

Small is under arrest, charged with killing his wife and setting fire to the cottage to destroy the evidences of his crime.

The hammer found in the boat on the shore will be examined at once to see if marks upon it are blood-stains, or rust from the action of the rain.

Dr. Hodsdon, who examined the body of Mrs. Small, has repeatedly stated that the eight wounds on the dead woman's scalp were "made with a blunt instrument; for example, a hammer."

Around the shores of the lake there are many lumber camps and farms and villages, and the number of persons who might have approached the cottage from the lake side by boat after dusk is unlimited.

SEE CHANCE TO FREE SMALL.

The finding of this boat and the hammer created such an impression today that Small's own attorneys said it was not impossible he would be released after the hearing Thursday.

They pointed out that a hammer is a tool in constant use about a lumber camp; and that resin—such as was found smeared on Mrs. Small's body—is likewise a plentiful commodity there.

When a lumberman wants to start a quick, hot fire, he takes a resinous pine knot. The attorneys urge this point, and declare that an ordinary citizen if he planned to start a fire would use the more familiar inflammables such as gasoline or kerosene.

Resin, while highly inflammable, is not a substance that an incendiary would be apt to choose, unless he were accustomed to its use.

PRODUCE ROPER'S LETTER

Before Father Was Slain Accuse Murderer Wrote That He Was Ill and Near to Death

Major Crowley, conducting the prosecution in the trial of Albert J. Roper in East Cambridge on a charge of murdering his father, in the course of his cross-examination of Roper today introduced in evidence a letter written by Roper to Mrs. Jessie Fox.

The letter was written about three weeks before Roper the elder was murdered, and it spoke of the elder Roper as ill and at the point of death at that time. As a matter of fact, the State claims the elder Roper was not sick then, and when Roper was asked today why he pretended his father was sick, and later pretended he was dead, Roper said he did it to get away from Mrs. Fox.

The letter from Roper to Mrs. Fox, couched in affectionate terms, reads thus:

LETTER TO MRS. FOX.

CROWN PRINCE THINKS UNITED STATES UNFAIR

By WILLIAM BAYARD HALE.

Headquarters of the Army of the German Crown Prince, west front (via courier to Berlin), Sept. 26.—"Why, I suppose my most anxious concern is the welfare of my men," the Crown Prince said to me. "I know their labors and their gallantry, and I want to see them well fed, well clothed and with a decent place to lay their heads in rest. I can't do all I should like to do in the face of the deadly peril that overhangs the Fatherland, but what can be done to make comfortable the lot of these heroes shall be done in my labors and all the resources which I can command can avail to bring it about."

It was Sunday morning when I reached the Crown Prince's headquarters. There was a peal of bells clamoring from the church across the street in every corridor and room of the school building occupied by the headquarters staff. Activity was at full tide. The evening before I spent in a tree top in the environs at Verdun, well known to the Crown Prince as an observation point.

When not at the front he devotes practically every hour to the study of various aspects of the tremendous problems which have descended in sobering effect upon this son of an illustrious house. What was the particular task that chiefly engrossed him? The problem of war that principally commanded his attention? The department to which he preferred to give most of his personal attention—artillery attack, pioneer work, trench work or aviation possibilities?

THOROUGH TRAINING.

"I have worked at every sort and kind of a problem," said the Crown Prince. "I have surveyed the whole field. You know I had the advantage of a pretty thorough professional training at Charlottenburg, and I trust no phase of the profession of arms is unfamiliar to me."

Officers and men with whom I talked during the week agreed that few commanders evince such an untiring personal interest, display such a real, exhaustive knowledge of the military needs of the hour or devote more time and labor to the anxious work than the Crown Prince. Every other day he is in some of the most position at the front on the firing line, at artillery bases and actually in the first trenches.

"But I may tell you," he said, "that I find at last in all my work, plannings and preparations in directing the motions of this vast machine that my thoughts are constantly reverting to the welfare of the men whose lives for the moment are committed to my keeping.

"No labor, no forethought of which I am capable, no technical skill which I can summon, shall be lacking to fulfil all that is demanded by the sacred guardianship.

"Have you had a chance to see enough of this dreadful business?' the Prince asked, 'or does your heart already seen enough over the sorrows which have descended upon this sad region of the earth? What a pity it is! All this terrible extinction of human life, blasting of the hope and expectancy of youth, the sacrificing of our energies and resources for into the future.

PROGRESS OF MANKIND.

"It is not alone for German lives, for wasted German energies that we mourn. We are well able, at least, comparatively well able, to bear it. But all the world, including America, has invested in the enterprise chances of success and will aid in footing the bill.

"Then, of course, is one reason why sympathies of your capitalists are with our enemies. Isn't there a book which says 'Where the treasure is there the heart is also?'

"It is a pity your treasure is not invested during the height of world agony in sowing the seed of preparation for the future, for then, as your prosperity would rest in the great harvest which follow to natural conditions rather than in the unhappy quest of the fruitage of war.

"You know something of the labors with which we are perfecting the effectual use of the instruments. I hope you have been fully be impressed with the fact that every general, every officer, every man would far rather see all this labor, skill, education, intellectual resource and physical prowess devoted to tasks of upbuilding and lengthening life, subduing the common enemies of men —disease and the material obstacles to the progress of mankind, rather than devoted to the destruction of other men.

"The prospects of peace? I confess I don't see any. It is no happiness to look forward to spending a third Christmas here. I have a wife and children and friends.

"I have been home just two fortnights in two years. Have I any reasons for your countrymen to think I fear that I will have to ask you that we feel that your government has not been 'fair and quite neutral.' I thoroughly understand why, naturally, your sympathies are drawn to the land from which you derive your natural language and with whose literature, scenery and political history you are most familiar.

"But we feel the attitude of the United States toward Great Britain and toward Germany is unexplained, even when every consideration is given to the direction of your natural sympathies. Neutral governments have responsibilities and duties which transcend the personal instincts of the gentlemen who happen at this moment to be administering them.

"What we feel is that your neutral duties are not discharged in the spirit of the high responsibilities resting upon you.

"It is true you file protests against British interference with your commerce, British rifling of your mails and intrusions in your domestic affairs.

"But these seem to be mere matters of form. They mean nothing. When, however, we Germans deem ourselves forced by the exigencies of this moral combat to take measures of self-protection which are not agreeable, you denounce us as barbarians.

"You excuse anything on the part of England, but seem incapable of making any allowance whatever for the conditions which impel us to exert our resources for defense.

"Our enemies, on the other hand, cannot transfer troops between the east and west except through slow and laborious transportation. This is a magnificent advantage of our central position.

"We are all tired of bloodshed, we all want peace. England is the power responsible for the continuation of the hopeless effort to crush us. In the Twentieth Century of the Christian era mankind might have been expected to have arrived at some maturity of thought and behavior. No one can witness, as I am sharing the last fortnight have witnessed, the spectacle presented by this appalling sacrifice, this inconceivable suffering preposterously out of proportion to any result obtainable without wondering whether reason has fled from the earth.

"Everything means much more that it used to. It would be a pity if war did not have some compensations and yet we have learned more it has been no little satisfaction to learn that our life hadn't made us effeminate. Some people were afraid it had. To tell the truth, there was a good deal of that, wasn't there, and a lot of frivolity and late hours and the like, but the stuff in us actually hadn't spoiled."

WAR SUMMARY

The full effect of the German and Austrian victory south of Hermannstadt remained today in doubt.

There is no question that the Rumanian army attacking Hermannstadt was taken in the rear and substantially destroyed. But this army may have been large or small, and the relatively small number of prisoners—3,000—as well as the fact that only a small force could have made the secret march to the Red Tower Pass in their rear, suggests that the defeated Rumanian army was not much larger than an army corps—40,000 to 50,000 men.

If the Austrian and German armies now push forward into Hungary, it will be fair to assume the Rumanian force destroyed was larger than present indications suggest. But if the force was relatively small, then the battle lines hereabouts will probably remain about as they are for the present.

The Russians have resumed their attacks in the direction of Lemberg. Repulsed with the customary heavy losses at most points, they made some gains southeast of Lemberg. Whether this offensive will be sustained is extremely doubtful. There have been a number of such brief attacks during the past few weeks, but none were followed up. The Russians have yet to disprove the theory that they have worn themselves out by their hard campaigning this Spring.

On the Somme front the battle is in one of those periods when the allies by sharp but local thrusts attempt to push forward their lines piecemeal. Both French and British report some success in these tactics. The German report speaks of repulsing strong attacks at several points, and admits the small gains claimed by the allies at other localities. The British seem to be aiming northward toward Bapaume, the French southward toward Peronne. Efforts to advance further east have for a time ceased. A further eastward advance would serve no particular advantage, now that the high road from Peronne to Bapaume has been cut.

brought down in flames. The Zeppelin was hit six times.

An Exchange Telegraph dispatch from Amsterdam says that Count Zeppelin had intended to take part in the raid, but at the eleventh hour changed his mind, being dissuaded by his family.

The War Office, in giving out the details of the raid, in an official statement issued said that during the Zeppelin fell near Potters Bar, where the crew of the Zeppelin shot down on one man was burned. The flaming wreckage fell in the neighborhood of the grave of the German airmen. The bodies of thirteen Germans have been found.

The Zeppelin fleet was made up of ten ships. They crossed the coast about 9 o'clock, the official report states, and after being frustrated in their attempts to attack London wandered aimlessly up and down the east coast dropping bombs.

The text of the official communication follows:

"Ten airships crossed the coast last night between 9 o'clock and midnight and approached the north of London at 10 o'clock. They were driven off by gunfire and pursued by aeroplanes. One attempted to return from the northwest later, but was attacked by guns and aeroplanes and was brought to earth in flames in the neighborhood of Potters Bar.

"A second ship attempted to attack London from the northeast, but was driven off at 1 o'clock this morning.

"A number of bombs were dropped, but no reports of casualties or damage had been received up to the time this report was issued."

Expecting them to make good, Samuel Harris, the steward, and Joseph Burgen, the proprietor, armed themselves and were ready when the bandits appeared.

Ireland Ready for New Revolution, Says Professor

By International News Service.

New York, Oct. 2. — "If England places conscription upon the Irish people, there will be another revolution in Ireland."

Dr. Joseph Byrnes, a professor in Fordham University, who has just completed an extended trip in Ireland, made this statement after his arrival here aboard the American liner Philadelphian.

Dr. Byrnes said he had been in Ireland four weeks. He traveled from one end of the country to the other and talked with every class of citizens.

"There is a great deal of dissension in Ireland," he declares, "and it is growing daily. On every side one hears the opinion that the former revolution was premature. At that time the majority of the Irish people were against it. Since then, however, the majority have changed their views and now the Sinn Feiners are looked up to as men with a cause.

"The whole situation in Ireland has changed because the people realize what publicity has done for them. As the matter now stands the Irish people believe that Ireland was well-away from them and they are ready to fight for their rights."

NEW HAVEN 'CUTS' PAY OF OFFICIALS

Reductions in salaries amounting to a large sum were indicated on the list filed today by the New Haven road of all officials of the road receiving more than $6,000.

One new official, at a salary of $50,000 a year, was included in the list. He is E. J. Pearson, assistant to the President, and Vice President.

The reductions in salaries are only apparent, it is said. They are matters of bookkeeping. The officials receive the same sums as heretofore, but the apparent reductions are paid by subsidiary roads for services rendered to those companies, instead of by the New Haven.

The list of officials receiving more than $6,000 is as follows:

VICE-PRESIDENT'S WIFE IS POISONED

St. Louis, Mo., Oct. 2.—Illness of Mrs. Thomas R. Marshall caused the Vice-President to cancel his engagement to address the Wilson Club at a reception that was to have been tendered him. He remained unmasked at his wife's bedside throughout the afternoon and evening.

Mrs. Marshall partook of oysters in Chicago and was taken very ill in South Bend, Ind., but insisted on making the trip to St. Louis with her husband. Physicians assured the Vice-President that Mrs. Marshall was not seriously poisoned.

FRENCH ATTACK 4 MILES FROM PERONNE

By CHARLES F. BERTELLI.

International News Service Staff Correspondent.

Paris, Oct. 2.—French troops are attacking the German positions only four miles from Peronne, one of the chief objectives of the allies on the Somme front. The official communique issued by the War Office today stated that the French had advanced in the region of Bouchavesnes, where many prisoners were taken in the fighting.

Bouchavesnes is three miles southeast of Combles and four miles from Peronne.

The text of the official statement follows:

"North of the Somme a consolidating operation enabled us to take German trenches east of Bouchavesnes, taking some prisoners.

"Everywhere else the night was calm.

"Adjutant Bloch shot down a captive balloon east of Bapaume, making the fifth to be brought down by this pilot."

Faucourt-L'Abbaye All in British Hands

By International News Service.

London, Oct. 2.—All of the village of Faucourt-L'Abbaye about which there has been savage fighting on the Somme front for several days, is now in the hands of the British. There was hand-to-hand fighting in the streets and in the battle-blasted houses before the remnants of the German garrison were driven out.

The official report of the War Office admits that the Germans compelled the British to relinquish part of a trench on another section of the Somme front, where hard fighting has been in progress for twenty-four hours. The text of the official report follows:

"During the night, south of the Ancre, we repelled an attack against our advanced positions. We have now established our front east of Faucourt-L'Abbaye. All the buildings in Faucourt-L'Abbaye have now been cleared of the enemy.

"Further west during the night we established our line from a point 1,200 yards north of Courcelette in the direction of Hessian trench. A counter attack forced us to relinquish a portion of Regina trench, against to the northward of this area. There has been stubborn fighting in that sector for the past twenty-four hours.

"Elsewhere on the front the night was calm, except for successful trench raids carried out north of Neuville St. Vaast and east of Laventie."

Sebastian Marti, styling himself "General Manager for America of La Lucha, a newspaper published in Havana, Cuba," issues the following announcement:

"La Lucha, of Havana, announces that it is willing to bet $10,000 that the allies will win the war. La Lucha will accept a wager from any part of the world, its offer remaining open until October 7."

PLAGUE GROWS AS SCHOOLS ARE OPENED

ATTENDANCE VOLUNTARY.

The attendance in the elementary schools in the South End was about 50 per cent. that of the opening day of other years. The same percentage held good in other crowded districts of the city.

Dr. Franklin B. Dyer, superintendent of schools, said today that he expected the attendance would be very light in the elementary schools.

"I expect there will be a very, very small attendance in the lower grades, but that the proportion will increase in the high and normal grades," he said.

"The attendance is voluntary, and even in the high schools, I do not believe the number of pupils will be up to the average of other years.

"The Normal schools will show a practically normal attendance in my opinion.

"Every child in the seventy schools in the city is being inspected, and the slightest suspicion of a sore throat or any other disorder will be immediately cared for. There are forty physicians engaged in this work."

The total attendance in the public schools last year was 112,282, these figures being obtained shortly after the Fall term began.

The average increase in attendance for the last three years has been close to 3,000, a large proportion of which has been in the elementary and kindergarten grades.

CURLEY CHILDREN HOME.

Mayor Curley lived up to his announced intention of keeping his children away from school during the continuance of the infantile paralysis epidemic, and his three children of school age were absent from their class rooms today.

"My children will not go to school until there has been a long spell of cold weather," said the Mayor today.

They are James, Jr., nine; Mary, eight, and Dorothy, five.

"The Boston children are far better off in school than on the streets," was the opinion of Dr. J. A. Coburn, physician for the Abraham Lincoln School district, one of the largest school divisions in the city, where children representing seventeen nationalities are to be found.

Dr. Coburn's opinion was given to a representative of the AMERICAN after the physician had examined hundreds of scholars, ranging all the way from kindergarten to the highest grades.

The doctor was making a thorough examination of each room. All children were required to march up and down with their hands high above their heads. When any girl or boy found it difficult to move arms and hands easily, a closer examination was called for.

Nothing was found among several thousand children which indicated contagion.

KEEP CHILDREN CLEAN.

"We shall go through this process each morning," explained Dr. Coburn, "until all danger is past. The fact is that the boys and girls of Boston are better off here in the schoolroom than on the streets playing where there may be infected dust and dirt. Here they are under close inspection, and the first sign of sickness will be immediately attended to, the child isolated and all necessary precautions taken.

"It is quite true that parents who are sending their children to school take greater pains in the matter of cleanliness than when the children are not going. While we do not say that infantile paralysis is a filth and dirt disease, we do know that it is better to be clean, and school is a great incentive."

It was found from a round of the Abraham Lincoln school district that about 50 per cent. of the children are still out of school. Teachers and principals were disappointed at the small attendance, but hope for more as conditions grows.

At the Tyler street school, where more small children of many nationalities congregate than in any other Boston school, it was found that, while scores of Syrian and Italian children failed to appear, more Chinese than ever registered. In some rooms nearly one-third came from Chinatown.

At the Hancock and Eliot schools in the North End there was a drop of 10 to 15 per cent. in the higher grades and in the kindergarten and first grades the registration was reported as around 40 per cent.

PARENTS QUERY BURGESS.

Less than 50 per cent. registered in the first grade at the Washington school in the West End, and in the high grades there was a falling off of almost 20 per cent.

The same percentages held true in most of the elementary schools throughout the city. At the Abraham Lincoln school on Ferdinand street less than 50 per cent. enrolled in the Kindergarten, and first grades, while there was a drop of 10 to 15 per cent. in the higher grades.

Many parents visited school headquarters on Mason street and interviewed George S. Burgess, secretary to Superintendent Dyer, with the purpose of obtaining special information, if possible, as to whether it was safe to send their children to school.

"Some seemed to have the idea that we had confidential information here," said Mr. Burgess. "To all inquiries I answered that I had sent my four children, one of whom is just a beginner, to school. I live in the Brighton district. On my street, out of forty children, only two stayed away today."

In the high schools only a small percentage of students stayed out.

The other case reported is that of Stephen Jewitt, No. 55 Astor street, Back Bay. He is thirty-five years old and is the only adult reported in today's list.

The total number of cases reported from Boston in the present epidemic is now 233. Of that number sixty-one have died. The mortality rate in addition for the disease is about 26 per cent.

Four new cases of infantile paralysis were reported in Melrose today, making seven since the epidemic began.

They are Joseph M. Bissell, two, of No. 6 West Emerson street; Joseph Hallahan, two, of No. 146 Lynde street; Clarence W. Clark, Jr., two, of No. 304 Upham street, and John D. Vindetta, one, of No. 171 Trenton street.

50 Per Cent. Decrease Seen in East Boston.

The attendance in the primary and lower grades of the East Boston schools was about 50 per cent. that of other years, with a decrease of from 25 to 35 per cent. reported in the upper grammar grades. The attendance at the high school was about normal.

Entering classes in the primary grades, where there are ordinarily 120 pupils, numbered about 60 today. This condition was true in most of the schools in the district.

The Theodore Lyman School and the Chelsworth School in East Boston were among the schools that showed a marked decrease in the number of pupils as compared with other years.

The Wiothrop schools, which opened today, showed almost a normal attendance, with the conditions much the same in Revere. In both these places physicians are busy examining the pupils.

Roxbury Attendance Is Below Normal.

In Roxbury and Jamaica Plain the attendance at most of the schools was but slightly under normal, and in some instances the teachers said the attendance was up to the average of other years. However, at the Mason School on Huntington avenue, Roxbury, a primary school, there was a marked falling off in attendance.

The John D. Philbrick School in the Mount Hope section also showed a large decrease.

The Hugh O'Brien School on Dudley street opened with an attendance that the teachers said was about the same as usual. The Bowditch School on Green street, Jamaica Plain, also reported a normal attendance. At the Agassis School, Burroughs street, Jamaica Plain, there was a slight falling off reported.

Conditions were about normal at the Girls' Latin School, where 700 pupils met in the school hall today.

The Thomas Gardner School district, Brighton, showed a marked falling off in attendance.

Falling Off in Lower Grades in Dorchester

A slight falling off in attendance, most of which was confined to the lower grades, was reported in Dorchester today. The upper grades of the grammar schools had full rooms for the most part, with little if any diminution in the number of pupils from other years. The high school was crowded to overflowing.

At St. Peter's Parochial School only the grades 5 to 8 were opened today. The lower grades will remain closed for some time longer.

The attendance at the Mather School was somewhat less than in other years, while the Oliver Wendell Holmes and the Mary Hemenway Schools reported that all their rooms were filled.

St. Gregory's Parochial School at Milton Lower Mills opened for the first time today, with 150 pupils in attendance. Prior to the opening of the school there was a mass, which was celebrated by the Rev. Richard F. Howard of St. Gregory's Church. Following the mass the children marched to the new school building.

The Milton schools showed an attendance that was practically normal. Every pupil was subjected to a medical examination, and the utmost care is being observed to guard against the disease.

Attendance Lower in South Boston.

Most of the schools in South Boston showed an attendance from 20 to 25 per cent. below normal, with the falling off more marked in the lower grades. This condition existed in the Oliver Hazard Perry, the Lincoln and Hugher schools. The Norcross school reported a normal attendance, with the High School above the average.

Medford, Melrose and Malden Schools Closed

Everett High School opened today with a considerably larger registration than expected. Early estimates show a big gain over last year. Double sessions will be started. A large staff of doctors and nurses inspected the students.

The elementary schools in Everett have postponed their opening indefinitely.

The opening of all schools in Medford, Melrose and Malden has been postponed until October 9.

Hyde Park Schools Show Falling Off.

The Hyde Park schools showed an attendance practically half that of other years with the exception of the High School, where 700 pupils reported, 100 more than a year ago.

The Fairmount School showed a registration of 171 as compared with 350 last year, the Henry Grew School 225, exactly half that of 1915 and the Lillie Greenwood School 238 as compared with 550 a year ago.

The kindergarten school in the Greenwood district had an attendance of but two pupils. Here the normal attendance is forty.

Wellesley Opens with 1,570 Students.

Wellesley College, which has remained closed two weeks longer than the regular vacation period, because of infantile paralysis, opened today with 1,570 students, the largest registration in the history of the college.

But one student remained away because of the infantile scare. She is a Texas girl, whose father wrote the college authorities that he thought it unwise for his daughter to stay away for two weeks longer.

There are 500 new students, 160 of whom are enrolled in the freshman class, making one of the largest entering classes in the history of the college.

Bunker Hill School Attendance Lower

The attendance at the Charlestown schools was normal with the exception of the Bunker Hill School, where a falling off of about 25 per cent. was reported.

Newton Decrease Is 25 Per Cent.

The Newton schools opened today with an attendance about 75 per cent. that of last year, most of the absentees being members of the lower grades. Fifteen doctors and as many nurses were kept busy inspecting the pupils.

The schools opened on a compulsory attendance basis and an interesting question has arisen as to what attitude will be adopted by the school authorities toward the children whose parents keep them from school because of the infantile paralysis epidemic.

The names of the afflicted in Newton are suppressed.

REFUSE TO PAD STREET PAYROLLS

Clinton Oct 2.—Martin J. Kane, former superintendent of streets here, testified in the district court today that James B. Connery, former member of the board of road commissioners, had told him to put the names of dead men on the payroll and divide the money with Connery, who was being arraigned, charged with the larceny of $500 from the town funds. Kane says he refused to pad the payroll.

Kane declared that several times Connery had expressed dissatisfaction because he did not secure larger amounts through the payroll padding and had told him that if he stopped padding money by that method, he would have been fired as superintendent.

MILK FAMINE IN BOSTON NOW FORECAST

according to the reports received by him through the association's agents throughout New England, the farmers are holding back their milk, refusing to put it aboard trains unless they are assured of their 58 cent price on the 8th.

From Vermont comes the report that, where normally 1,000 cans are carried on the White River Junction train today less than fifty cans could be secured.

Mr. Patten added: "At present I understand the four cars are being held between Bellows Falls and Holland. The milk that is being received at East Somerville is the last that was due to come here under the six-month contracts."

Mr. Patten further stated that at Bristol, Vt., producers refused to ship their milk. "It is so all along the line," he declared. "They're in earnest. Why, the Merrimack County Farmers' Association, representing over 500 milk producers, met today and has promised to stand by the farmers in their fight.

SHORTAGE PREDICTED.

"You will find that after this milk is all in there will be a remarkable shortage. Naturally the dealers will draw upon their reserve supply, at their various stations in the country. I understand that already they are doing this.

"We do not want to alarm the public, of course, but the situation is just as we put it. We want to get the milk to Boston and, if the dealers refuse our price, we will do all we can to get it there somehow."

Reports from northern New England show that there were large decreases in shipments early today. These slumps will show up in the supply reaching Boston in the morning. Secretary Patten stated that it might be a day or two before the decrease was very noticeable, but it will show up plain enough when it breaks.

Secretary Patten, in his room at the Quincy House, told the newspaper men that men in the employ of the association were riding on the milk trains tabulating the cans removed.

According to the reports coming to him over the telephone from various points in New England the farmers are in earnest.

From Wallingford, Vt., comes the word that the seventy-six producers of that point are firm. They did not ship their usual supply today.

Mr. Patten was asked if it would be advisable for the New York milk supply. He said: "No, very unwise, as the freight rates would be so high that it would be just as cheap for the dealers to give us the price we ask for."

When asked if he could see any other avenue of transportation to get milk into Boston, he stated that he could not at this time.

TO GET AWAY "FROM HER."

In the course of questioning as to his relations with Mrs. Fox, Roper was asked:

Q—Why did you neither call nor write when you left?

A—I thought I would have a talk with my father about the story of his death when I was in Wednesday, when he came to Boston.

Mayor Curley, carrying the questioning to the matter of money found in Mrs. Fox's room, asked the defence counsel was the money Roper had after his father was murdered. Roper admitted under the examination that Mrs. Fox suggested that taking the money and that this caused him to quarrel with her.

Q—When you found the money, did it not occur to you to go to her and say, "Mrs. Fox, here is Rs 155 that I found in the closet?" A—No. I thought I might need some of it.

He was questioned as to when he and Mrs. Fox found and how much. He remembered several irregular passports of $5 to $10.

PRESENT FROM HIS WIFE.

He declared that he was on friendly terms with his wife throughout this period, and that his wife gave him a diamond ring for a Christmas present.

Q—Why did you pawn the ring to get $2 to go to Lowell when you knew where there was $155 in a drawer that could be got without trouble?

A—That was not mine.

Q—Was the diamond ring pawned not belonged to Miss Florence Elliott.

A—Where is the gold piece when you pawned the ring? A—In my pocket.

Q—You always carried it? A—Yes.

Q—And so ten hours after your father was murdered you gave Mrs. Fox the $10 gold piece you always carried in your pocket?

Q—And all the time you were at 16 Watt street you had that $10 gold piece? Why, you father was a fool to give good your bad checks? When you were borrowing money from Mrs. Fox you never once drug out your watch. You always had that $10 gold piece! A—Yes.

Look and Feel Clean, Sweet and Fresh Every Day

Drink a glass of real hot water before breakfast to wash out poisons.

Life is not merely to live, but to live well, eat well, digest well, work well, sleep well, look well. What a glorious condition to attain, and yet how very easy it is if one will only adopt the morning inside bath.

Folks who are accustomed to feel dull and heavy when they arise, splitting headache, stuffy from a cold, foul tongue, nasty breath, acid stomach, can, instead, feel as fresh as a daisy by opening the sluices of the system each morning and flushing out the whole of the internal poisonous stagnant matter.

Everyone, whether ailing, sick or well, should, each morning, before breakfast, drink a glass of real hot water with a teaspoonful of Bisurated Magnesia Phosphate in it to wash from the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels the previous day's indigestible waste, sour bile and poisonous toxins; thus cleansing, sweetening and purifying the entire alimentary canal before putting more food into the stomach. The action of hot water and limestone phosphate on an empty stomach is wonderfully invigorating. It cleans out all the sour fermentations, gases, waste and acidity and gives one a splendid appetite for breakfast. While you are enjoying your breakfast the water and phosphate is quietly extracting a large volume of water from the blood and getting ready for a thorough flushing of all the inside organs.

The millions of people who are bothered with constipation, bilious spells, stomach trouble, rheumatism; others who have sallow skins, blood disorders and sickly complexions are urged to get a quarter pound of limestone phosphate from the drug store, which will cost very little, but is sufficient to make anyone a pronounced crank on the subject of internal sanitation.—Advertisement.

BAY STATE BOYS HIKE IN DUST AND CACTUS

By BERT FORD.

Camp Cantillo, Tex., Oct. 2.—The Massachusetts forces which are leading the Tenth Army Division, commanded by General Charles E. Morton, on a fifteen-day hike, broke camp today and started on the second leg of the journey to Fort Selden.

The men and animals arose refreshed despite the strain of Sunday's march and their diet of dust. The weather is ideal. The days are warm but the nights are cold.

A worse road than that covered yesterday just before making camp would be hard to find. Compared to it the muddiest roads in Maine in Spring would be like macadam. It wound through cactus and thick mesquite growth and the sand and adobe powder was almost a foot thick.

WALLOWED IN DUST.

The "dough boys" slipped and wallowed in it and it coated them and filled their ears and nostrils and parched their mouths and emptied canteens which could not be filled in a hurry. There is always a wanton use of water on the first day of such a hike, but the men soon learn its value.

A full glass of ice water yesterday would have been worth a "five spot." General E. Leroy Sweetser had his brigade under way from Camp Cotton at 7 o'clock promptly yesterday. Colonel Edward L. Logan led the column with the Ninth, and next came Colonel Frank A. Graves and the Eighth, and then the Fifth with Colonel Willis W. Stover.

PUP TENTS IN MESQUITE.

Camps were pitched in a valley eight miles beyond El Paso, a valley framed by mountains and with the Rio Grande flowing less than a mile away to water the horse and mules.

The Bay State brigade reached its camp site by 10 a. m. Sunday and in a twinkling pup tents appeared like mushrooms among the mesquite. It was the first time that the Mass. chusetts troops slept under shelter tents on the border and this is their first hike as a division with war equipment under war conditions.

The colony at the smelter is Mexican, and the men, women and children squatted in front of adobe huts and lined the roads watching the wonderful procession that wriggled like a snake of khaki from early morning until 4 o'clock in the afternoon. Watering carts brought water and filled galvanized troughs which each unit brought along and the animals lapped up the muddy river.

The marshes will be made in the morning and as the column advances through New Mexico it will take the form of an army of invasion.

25 FLEE FLAMES IN NEW HOTEL AT AYER

Ayer, Oct. 2.—Twenty-five guests of the New Union House escaped in their nightclothes, when fire was discovered in the second story of the hotel.

Nicholas Adams and F. A. Freeman guests were overcome by smoke and revived by local physicians. The damage is estimated at $3,000. The building was owned by the William Clark heirs of Boston.

GASOLINE SUPPLY SHOWS INCREASE

Washington, Oct. 2.—A big increase in the quantity of gasoline extracted from natural gas is indicated in statistics for the year 1915 just completed by the Geological Survey. The quantity of raw gasoline extracted from natural gas and sold in that year amounted to 65,364,665 gallons, a gain of 22,712,033 gallons, or 53 per cent. more than the quantity marketed in 1914.

DOUBLE AMOUNT OF EXPLOSIVE EXPORTED

Washington, Oct. 2.—The total exports in explosives from the United States in August amounted to $74,777,977, more than three times what they were for August a year ago.

The exports are distributed as follows: Cartridges, $6,185,067; powder, $26,299,699, and others, $42,280,211.

BROKER SMALL BLAMES FOES FOR ARREST

boat in the lake the day of the murder have been identified. They came from Melrose, and were living in a cottage half a mile away. They happened to row by the Small cottage early in the day, but knew nothing of the fire at night until they heard the shouts of the men who had gone out from the village to the cottage.

MAKE RETURNED HOME.

They were Arthur Rodman, Gustav Glover, Dr. Darby, a dentist, and a Mr. Underhill. They left late Saturday morning by automobile to return home. They had hired their cottage from S. O. Hinckins, hardware and grocery dealer.

Small passed a restful night last night, and his condition was improved. When Dr. Hodgdon made a visit, spoke of the funeral services for his wife, which will be held today, he broke down and cried.

Mrs. Elizabeth Curray, mother of Mrs. Small, arrived shortly after noon for the funeral. Small paid $50 for his wife's casket and $20 for a wreath of flowers to rest upon it.

Small has told for the first time his own story, in his own defense.

He told how he left the house in mid-afternoon on his usual business trip to Boston, how he kissed his wife good-by behind the kitchen door because she did not wish the driver of the team which had come to take her husband to the station to see his farewell; how the last thing she said to him was "Don't forget the lace," referring to a request she had made that he do some shopping in Boston for her.

Small declared his love for his wife, declared that he had always treated her tenderly and with consideration, and called the stories that he had been brutal to her

He flatly declared his belief that three men in the town here, his enemies, were responsible for his arrest.

"There are at least three men in this town capable of causing my arrest because they are cowards at heart," he said.

"I am a Republican in national affairs, but locally I believe in standing for the best man, regardless of politics."

WON'T PLEAD INSANITY.

There were tears in Small's eyes as he told of his farewell to his wife. There was anger in his eyes when he branded as ridiculous reports that he would make an insanity defense.

"My defense will be that I am innocent," he exclaimed. "Nothing else will be necessary."

The police investigation of the case today centred on two points. They sought to discover the source of resin, traces of which were found on the torso of Mrs. Small, and which they believed was used to make more certain the combustion of the body in the fire, and they searched the ruins of the cottage to see if there was any trace of an incendiary device by which Small could have fired the cottage five or six hours after he left for Boston.

SEARCH RUINS ANEW.

In addition to the resin trail and the statements by Small, were these developments today:

1—Plans were completed for the shipping to Hanover of certain parts of the slain woman's body for chemical examination by Professor H. N. Kingsford, at Dartmouth College.

2—A more thorough search was made of the ruins, not only for resin traces but for other possible clews and incidentally, for jewelry worn by Mrs. Small.

3—Further examination of the gasoline can in a shed near the burned cottage. Small states that there were four gallons of the fluid in the can. Examination has shown that the can gave evidences of having been burned when empty.

4—Further examination of the other can in which had been put five gallons of kerosene on Thursday last.

5—Holding of the burial plans—the funeral having been set for today—by Attorney-General Pattee's order to have the body kept in the receiving vault at Chelsea Centre until Tuesday, the date of the hearing of the charge against Small.

HAD RESIN IN HOUSE.

Just how extensive a search they will make to locate the place where the resin was bought with which the woman's body was covered the officials refuse to state. However, they have already combed the local stores, and it is understood the quest will broaden out to cover surrounding territory, and it may possibly extend much further.

A possibility that at least some of the resin might have long been in the house was suggested today. Small, in his talk with the newspaper men, told of his wife's proficiency as a violinist and of the possible loss of her $700 violin in the fire.

One of the investigators suggests that this violin would account for the presence in the house of at least a small amount of resin, though perhaps not of an amount sufficient to cover a human body.

Resin must have been used by the slain woman for her violin bow; but whether her love for the violin may thus have unwittingly furnished one of the instruments in the perpetration of the dastardly murder is something that the police say they cannot answer.

The one thing the officials say they can be certain about is that the resin was the resort of the slayer in the hope of making sure that all evidences of the crime would be destroyed by the fire.

DOCTORS PRESENT.

The resin, it is stated, was found by Medical Referee R. Frank Horne and his assistants, and the authorities are working on the theory that the Small bed was covered with this highly inflammable material.

When the torso of Mrs. Small was brought from Ossipee, beside it on a bench in the stable of E. W. Hodgdon were placed the skull, ashes and other exhibits in the possession of the authorities.

Attorney Matthews and Stevens, counsel for Small, and Dr. L. E. Grant of Somersworth, Dr. William T. Elliott of Berwick, Me., and Dr. H. S. Anderson of Milton Falls, for the defense, examined the remains for about an hour.

There were also present Dr. W. H. Shedd, representing the State; Attorney-General Percy T. Pattee, County Solicitor Walter D. Hill, High Sheriff Arthur Chandler and Dr. Hodgdon, special assistant to the medical referee.

Small talked apparently quite freely with the reporters about his predicament and the events leading to it. He declared that he was standing at the side door of his cottage last Thursday afternoon when George Kennett, the hotel clerk, drove up there that he immediately went back inside after his trip, coat and cane, and kissed his wife, who was dressed in a light pink kimono.

"That was the last time I saw her," sobbed the accused man, who was a dejected looking figure as he leaned against the bars of the outer enclosure which surrounds his cell and those others in the row, ranged along one side of the room.

Small insisted that every door in the cottage was unlocked when he left and there was not a spring lock in any door.

Small says he kissed his wife goodbye just out of Kennett's sight behind the door. He continued:

"I did this for the reason that I always kissed her good-bye when I went on a trip and did not kiss her in the presence of Kennett because she was averse to a public display of this kind. The last thing she said to me was, 'Don't forget that lace.' Those were the last words she ever said to me."

BREAKS DOWN.

Small broke down when reference was made to a calendar hanging on the cell door. The calendar has a quotation for each week of the year and Small said he had found great consolation in reading it.

It was the quotation for the week of September 24 to 30 that caused Small to lean heavily against the bars and to weep as if his heart were broken. The quotations reads:

"Home is the one place in all this world where hearts are sure of each other. It is the place of confidence. It is the spot where expressions of tenderness gush out without any sensation of awkwardness and without any dread of ridicule."

Small's later version of his leaving his wife differed in a slight degree from that which he gave Friday night while he was being detained by High Sheriff Chandler awaiting action by the county officers.

At that time he seemed sure that his wife was in a position to be seen by Kennett when the latter drove up to the door. Small said he was dumfounded when told other details of Kennett's story. "I cannot see how the man could say that," he exclaimed.

He had very little to say about the charges that he had been brutal to his wife. He was requested to talk about the Ossipee incident as related by Selectman Charles Smart, who has alleged that he heard the accused swear at his wife when she lost her hold on a rope used to raise the pole and that Small aimed a vicious kick at her with his lame leg. Smart said this happened about a year ago.

Small's only comment was that Smart was opposed to him in a business way.

TELLS OF GASOLENE.

The prisoner admitted that a five-gallon can of kerosene was delivered at the cottage shortly before noon last Thursday by Charles Scoggel and said that Scoggel remained in the cottage for about an hour. There were four gallons of gasolene in the shop in the rear of the house, Small said.

Kennett and Small agree to the door through which Small left the cottage. Both say that it was the side door and both say that Small shut the door and did not lock it. The prisoner insists there was not a spring latch in the house.

Today, it seems apparent, that these statements coupled with the fact that a fire-blackened lock, its key inserted and locked on the inside, was picked up in the ruins, are of vital importance to the defence.

Persons who are familiar with the house are sure that this lock was the lock of the side door.

The reasons for believing it was the side door lock are that in the place where it was picked up in the ruins there had been no other door. It was obvious from the way the latch was turned that the key was inserted on the inside.

"How could that door through which Small departed in plain view of Kennett, have been locked on the inside by Small," the defence will ask.

County officials maintain they have learned that Dr. R. A. Carleton saw several children playing with this lock Friday afternoon. The prosecution will attempt to show that the children were turning the key and that the exhibit is therefore valueless as evidence.

Small told of rescuing his wife, Miss Minnie Leighton and Miss Florence Thackleburg when the sailboat in which they were capsized and threw the party into the water.

DESCRIBES RESCUES.

"We were struck by a squall and the boat, a centre-board craft, went over like a flash," he said. Luckily, there was a tender, and I got into that. My wife called to me to save the young women first, and after a struggle I got them to the sides of the tender, where they clung. Then Mrs. Small came up from under the sailboat and I saw that she was bleeding about the face. I pushed an oar to her and she placed it under her head and kicked like a bull frog. This action sent her away from the tender. I called to her to stop kicking and then cut the rope of the tender. Then I pushed her out an oar and she grabbed it.

"I had a struggle to get the women ashore. It was fully three and one-half hours after I pulled that boat with the women clinging to it and we did not reach the camp of Professor Bonner until midnight."

Small discussed several topics directly or indirectly connected with his predicament. He said that Professor Smith of Technology had induced him to buy the Ossipee cottage, at a cost of $800; that he had expended $5,000 in improvements, and had insured the place for $4,000.

He declared that in the panic of 1907 he had made a fortune in the brokerage business in Boston; that he also had lost two fortunes, one when the brokerage house of F. S. Colton in Boston, was forced to the wall.

He said that the day he went to Boston, last week, he took his checkbook, intending to purchase 100 shares of stock on a 20 points margin. This required a $2,000 investment. He declined to tell what he is worth at present.

Speaking of the infirmity which makes him slightly lame, he said that in his younger days he broke his right leg while playing baseball in Portland, and that he has been crippled ever since.

ADMITS OWNING REVOLVER.

Small admitted that he possessed a 32-caliber Colt automatic, which he said was fully loaded when he left. This, it is said, has been found, intact. He also owned two rifles, one a 22-high-power Savage, and a shotgun. He kept these, he said, for small game, as well as for protection.

The funeral of Mrs. Small takes place from the Congregational Church in Centre Ossipee at 2 p. m. today. Undertaker W. A. Bennett of Freedom has charge of the remains, which will be in a plain black crepe casket, purchased by the husband at the cost of $35. The body will be kept in the receiving vault until Thursday.

When Bennett went to the jail to make arrangements for the funeral he was told by the prisoner, he says, that the casket "would be good enough for the condition the body is in." Across the casket or nearby will rest the beautiful floral piece marked in gold lettering "Love," also provided by the husband.

Rev. A. J. Small will officiate. The mother and sister of the murdered woman are expected here on the noon train today.

MRS. DI COLA OFF FOR CHICAGO

"Mrs. Antonina Di Cola," the woman who for a quarter of a century passed as the wife of Gaspare Di Cola, left Brookline, where she had been staying since Di Cola's funeral, and is on her way to Chicago. She was accompanied by Joseph Di Cola and his nineteen-year-old daughter, second cousins or the murdered fruit importer.

It is said that the object of the trip was that she might have a change of scene and get rested. Almost from the moment of Di Cola's murder she has been surrounded by well-meaning friends and bothered by persons who wished to see her more out of curiosity than anything else, with the result that she has hitherto been unable to escape from the atmosphere of the tragedy. She is expected back in about a week.

Meanwhile the investigation that has been in progress to bring the murderer to justice will continue. The Old Colony Trust Company, acting as special administrator of Gaspare Di Cola's estate, is at work on an examination of the dead man's business and private papers.

The Brookline police, with the help of Italian members of the Boston force, are still quietly working on the case.

ROPER TELLS WHY HE WORE CREPE

Albert R. Roper, who is on trial charged with the murder of his father, a wealthy Tewksbury florist, returned to the witness stand today when court opened at East Cambridge and was cross-examined by Major R. J. Crowley, deputy district attorney.

The defendant took the stand at the last session and he probably will be the only witness today.

He was closely questioned by Major Crowley regarding the crepe he wore on his arm previous to the death of his father.

Q.—Why did you have the crepe sewed on? A.—To make Mrs. Fox believe it true father had died.

Q.—What did you say to the tailor when he sewed it on? A.—I told him that my sister had died and that I wanted to wear a mourning band.

Q.—Why did you tell him that? A.—It was the first thing that came into my mind.

Q.—What were your feelings towards your father at this time? A.—They were the very best.

Q.—Your relations with Mrs. Fox were not of the best then? A.—Yes they were.

The defence plans to put Miss Dorothy Fox, daughter of Mrs. Jessie Fox, with whom Roper lived, on the stand as soon as the cross-examination of Roper is finished.

McCORMACK HAS RECORD AUDIENCE

By F. J. McISAAC.

A record audience for the Boston Opera House was present last evening at the concert by John McCormack, under the auspices of the Knights of Columbus Building Association. The big theatre has held many great throngs, but last night there were close to 600 people seated upon the stage and about 3,000 in the auditorium.

The drawing powers of McCormack appear to increase as the seasons go by, and the big tenor seems to mellow and improve in voice with every year.

There is nothing mysterious about the popularity of McCormack. He is a great singer, and he sings rare tunes in a language we all understand.

His program last night ranged from the Prize Song from Wagner's "Meistersinger," through Handel, Schubert, and Brahms, to quaint Irish airs.

There is no tenor who sings the classics with better art than McCormack, and none who can compete with him at all in his peculiar field of Irish ballads.

An interesting number was a recently discovered Irish song by Handel, "The Poor Irish Lad." Its authenticity is undisputed and it is a very effective song.

Donald McBeath, the violinist, assisted Mr. McCormack as usual.

During the intermission an appeal for funds for the Building Association of the K. of C. was made by the president, John E. Bitzer.

PRINCESS CHIMAY LEFT $1,000 IN WILL

Chicago, Oct. 2.—Once more the Princess de Chimay. This time it is the will of her mother, the late Catherine L. Morrow, formerly Mrs. Ebenezer B. Ward of Detroit, giving some $1,000,000 to three grandchildren, but leaving the Princess only $1,000. The will is contested in a suit filed by Eber B. Ward, the son, who claims that John Morrow, his stepfather, and Joseph de Riquet, Prince de Chimay, on behalf of his two children, were in collusion to turn the mind of his mother-in-law in their favor.

He said that the churches will even merge their Sunday morning services with the tabernacle's service, as requested by Billy Sunday. CLING TO "OXFORD" CALL UNTIL OCT. 15

Some confusion may occur in telephoning when calling "Beach." That is if you follow the announcement made some time ago on the change from Oxford. The change will not be until October 15, so cling to "Oxford," and don't worry the operator. That person has troubles of her own.

Mackmen Here Today

Sox Regulars May Rest

By JOHN W. MORAN, JR.

It having been definitely settled that Bill Carrigan's battling Red Sox have won the pennant, a feeling of laziness pervades the camp at Fenway Park. Connie Mack and his Athletics, in town for the last set of games of the regular season, will in no wise bother Manager Bill or his men.

Up to yesterday it had been supposed the Red Sox would have to battle "Bullet Joe" Bush for the game that meant the crown. Today they care not for Bush, nor world any other hurler bother them. From now on it's easy work, just enough of it to keep in shape for the big tilt which opens Saturday.

Though Carrigan gives us no brief to speak for him, we assume he will start at once to condition his hurlers for the big clash. In all probability Ernie Shore will start today's game. After three or four innings he will probably give way to Carl Mays or George Foster. So it will be during the other two games. Ruth and Leonard also taking their turns in order to keep in shape.

Carrigan may allow Scott, Gardner and Janvrin to get some rest during the next few days. It's a moral certainty now that the fight is over; Bill spends his minutes getting ready for either Philadelphia or Brooklyn.

HACK'S NEW PHENOM.

Whereas fans have become accustomed to seeing new faces with the Athletics, Mack, also, is all inclined to disappoint. He exhibits one or two new faces on this visit. Possibly the chief attraction of the latest collection is Thrasher, an outfield ar, who recently came up from the Atlanta (Southern Association) club. As his name implies, he is a thrasher, for on Saturday he slammed the offerings of Clark Griffith's hurlers far and wide.

Reports from scouts and others who saw Thrasher at work during the season in the Southern Association are to the effect that he's a mighty slashy ball player. They claim he's a rattling good fielder, as well as a fine hitter. Connie may yet surprise the world by making his how next season with a classy ball club. Surely with such pitchers as Bush, Nabors, Meyers, Shawkey, Johnson, Shiebeld and Parnham he appears to have the makings of a pretty good staff.

Always an astute manager, Mack is still working along old lines. He hasn't had much to say this year regarding what he hopes to do in the future, but it's a hundred to one he doesn't always have a division in the American League to himself. By that we mean he won't always have a second division. Possibly in another season Mack will shoot up a trifle and get long back to his old tricks of winning pennants for himself and the Shibes.

JANVRIN HAS DELIVERED.

While Janvrin isn't a Barry, and probably may never become one, he is nevertheless a mighty nifty ball player to have lying around. He can jump into any one of the four infield positions and acquit himself creditably. He is not at all inconsistent, for at one interval he is quite apt to turn in a most remarkable fielding play and then of another is apt to display the rankest possible error. Folks who saw all the Yankee games had an edge on those who didn't, in order to see this fact demonstrated full well.

In the bat Janvrin is an especially dangerous individual. He's apt to crack one right on the nose at any minute and thus bowse the curtains on an otherwise perfect ball game. From the opposition's standpoint, Janvrin is a player of the type who might be expected to enter a World's Series and emerge wreathed in praise of the greatest possible order.

Fans have wondered just how much of a difference it all make having Speaker out of the lineup and rightfully they might. "Spoke" was a tower of strength to Red Sox teams for several seasons when suddenly he was sold to Cleveland and Tillie Walker purchased to fill his position.

WALKER IN-AND-OUTER.

In some respects Walker has been a "bloomer" and in others he's made good. In the writer's opinion Walker is a streaky ball player, one who won't always look good, but who will at times shine more brilliantly. It's a moral certainty Walker hasn't got an arm that measures up to Speaker's. He can throw from the ball, but most of his best throws have been in exhibitions and not in regular pastimes. Exhibition throws don't get a team much.

However, the Red Sox appear to have a mighty fine prospect in "Chick" Shorten, who has had more of a chance during the latter months of the season.

Shorten not only looks like a good fielder, but, in addition, gives the impression of being a good hitter. His arm may not be quite so powerful as Walker's, but it isn't every day in the year that a center fielder is called on to make throws to the plate.

Further to it, it may be that Boston fans, through watching Speaker, Lewis and Hooper perform, have come to expect too much in the throwing line from their outer gardeners.

While the Red Sox don't appear to be as strong a club as they were a year ago this time, they are nevertheless a pretty classy organization and one that will fight to the last ditch to maintain the unbroken record of the city in the matter of World's Series victories.

Bancroft Out of Braves' Series

Philadelphia, Oct. 2. — Shortstop Dave Bancroft's injury in Saturday afternoon's game with Brooklyn, according to competent observers, is the only thing that can lose the pennant for the Phillies.

The absence of Bancroft from the game is a serious blow at this stage of the race, as Moran has no defensive player in Bancroft's class. The loss of the second game Saturday is attributed to Dave being compelled to leave the fray with a sprained leg, as the infield went to pieces immediately afterwards, and with the Dodgers batting Alexander hard, the whole team wilted.

Moran's only hope is that Stock, who jumped into the third-base job last season and went through with it, will be able to repeat his 1915 performance at short, as Bancroft is out of the game for the rest of the championship season.

Up to Dodgers to Tumble Giants

Brooklyn, Oct. 2.—The Giants come visiting this afternoon in the first game of the all-important four-game series with the Dodgers. It is generally believed that anything short of an even break will mean disaster and loss of the flag.

There is just one feature of the Giants' great record which may operate in favor of the Dodgers. The great winning streak has at last been broken and McGraw's boys won't have the incentive to fight so desperately through the next four games which has actuated them over the past.

CLEVELAND TEAM WINS.

Cleveland, Oct. 2.—The championship of Class A teams in the National Baseball Federation was won by Klesch's Ward 12 team of this city by defeating the Knights of Columbus team of Louisville, Ky., 2-1.

BUSHER BLANKS GIANTS.

Paterson, N. J., Oct. 2.—The New York Giants failed to connect with Otto Rettig's slow ball and the Paterson Silk Sox, a semi-pro team, defeated the record-breakers, 2-0.

KOLEHMAINEN TO COACH

New York, Oct. 2.—Willie Kolehmainen, world's professional long-distance champion, has been signed by the Irish-American A. C. to coach its cross-country team.

Barry Out of Big Show So Declare His Mates

The pennant-winning Red Sox are counting upon going into the World Series using precisely the same lineup as Manager Carrigan had in the field when the Big Drive was made in the West, the White Sox and Tygers humbled on their own lots, and Bill Donovan's Yankees well thrashed in last week's big series at Fenway Park.

Jack Barry, second baseman extraordinary of the Gamecocks, who has been out of the batting for the past six weeks with a broken hand, will scarcely get into the Big Show. George Foster, one of hurling heroes of last Fall's scrapping with the Phillies, whose lone performance the past month was five innings' work against the Browns in St. Louis, will also probably remain on the sidelines.

The majority of the unmarried members of the Champions are living at Putnam's Hotel, at Huntington avenue and Gainsborough street. The AMERICAN informed them early Sunday afternoon that the White Sox had the opening game in their doubleheader in Cleveland. Consequently, were Shore, Foster, Mays, Wyckoff, Scott, Walsh, Wagner and the rest of the players at "Putt's" a happy lot.

The Red Sox, to a man, have been pretty certain of winning the flag for Boston all Summer. Back home from their recent successful Western tour, they were practically sure it was all over but the shouting. Bagging three out of four from the Yankees made the players confident all was going to be well. However, they kept from gloating until it was a sure thing they had the pennant won.

STRAIN OFF RED SOX.

The Red Sox naturally feel elated over coming through. Now they have a full week in which to limber up and complete their plans for the world's series. There's no one worry in camp. Not that the band has been worrying, though the players have been under considerable of a strain ever since they left home August 20, to spend practically the entire month of September on the road and call on their seven rivals.

Now the strain is off and the Red Sox are bound to be fresh and chuck full of the desired "pep" when they toe the mark in the Big Show next Saturday afternoon.

The AMERICAN can inform the fans of New England that the players fear Barry will be unable to get into the world's series. Incidentally, all are loud in their praise of Harold Janvrin. Barry's brilliant understudy, and the clever native son on the club. Janvrin held up his end in great style while the Red Sox were rattling down the big, defying brilliantly and driving in his share of the runs.

JANVRIN DID HIS PART.

"I don't see how we could have won one more game with Barry at his old station than we landed with Janvrin subbing for Jack," said one of the team's veterans. "Janny came through; he filled Barry's shoes single."

Foster divided honors with Shore in last Fall's series with the Phillies. Incidentally, it can be said that the pecting to see Pat Moran bring his machine home in advance of the Dodgers, thus again meeting their foes on a year ago.

The Red Sox prefer to play the Dodgers. That's because Magnate Ebbets can crowd some 25,000 fans into his yard, while 20,000 is practically the limit at the Phillies park. But they are almost certain they are to have it out with the Phillies again, looking for the Brooklyn to do no better than break even in their four-game series with the Giants, while all hands have the hunch the Phillies will take four or five games, if not all six, from the Braves.

NOT COUNTING ON FOSTER.

Foster was in the bull-pen at such times as "Dutch" Leonard was being hit by the Yankees Saturday. While G. Goose-Egg might have wound up that combat, had it been necessary for Carrigan to have believed Leonard, it is extremely doubtful if he will be called upon to mount the hillock in the Big Show.

Ruth, Shore, Mays and Leonard are "right," and their teammates are looking for them to bring home the 60 per cent. of the Jackpot regardless of what National League fomen the Red Sox buck.

Unquestionably are Barry and Foster two of Bill Carrigan's brightest stars, gamesters who have ever done their best work in the important games and heroes of past blue-ribbon battles. But to hear the boys up at "Putt's" tell it, the chances are Jack and George will be missing from the title games, though an front in the line when the prize money is distributed, as they did their full share of the work in bringing the American League flag to Boston.

N. B.—The one Best Bet in the world series, so say the Red Sox, is BOSTON.

ELI CREW IS NOT TO ROW COLUMBIA

New Haven, Ct., Oct. 2.—Hopes that the Yale and Columbia varsity eights might race again this Fall, as was the case a year ago, were shattered when Coach Guy Nickalls of the Blue Navy announced that there would be no special races outside of the usual fall regatta.

SECRET FOOTBALL SCOUTING SCORED BY WALTER CAMP

By WALTER CAMP.

This matter of "scouting" is something that should be clearly understood and defined, as there is a great deal of misapprehension regarding it. Those who deprecate it seem almost always to have the impression that it is a practice wherein a coach or assistant coach from one team goes and "sneaks" in to the practice of another team, and, taking care not to be discovered, secures an opportunity to watch and to listen to the coaching and practice of another team while they are unaware of his presence.

This is the kind of scouting that is unsportsmanlike and unfair. On the other hand, every coach is quite at liberty to go, as is the usual custom, and watch another team play in its open games in order to study up a defence for the attack, or to watch the defence and see how he can improve his attack by adapting it to the methods of defence that his opponents are using.

It has been the writer's custom in the old days when he was the coach of the Yale team, whenever he went to see a team play, to let the coach of that team know in advance that he was coming, in order that the coach, if he desired to conceal any plays or would be affected in any way by the presence of another coach, would know of that presence.

SHOULD NOT SCOUT UNHERALDED

No one who is a coach should ever send another team in ordinary practice without letting the home coach know that he was going to do it and getting consent.

What really happens and gives rise to the greatest criticism of scouting is, however, entirely unauthoritative. That is, some one who has no connection whatsoever with the official coaching staff of a university may take it upon himself to go and see some other practice and perhaps "clean knowledge surreptitiously, which he then retells and which eventually finds its way to the opposing coaches.

That is one of the reasons why secret practice is regarded as essential rather more than that there is any suspicion that coaches or assistant coaches would come and endeavor to gain an unfair advantage by underhand methods.

MANY OTHER GAMES CARDED.

The principal games of Saturday, October 7, will be Harvard-Tufts at Cambridge, Yale-Virginia at New Haven, Princeton-North Carolina at Princeton, Navy-Georgetown at Annapolis, Army-Washington & Lee at West Point, Lafayette-Swarthmore at Easton, Penn-Franklin-Marshall at Philadelphia and Columbia-Hamilton at New York.

Those of lesser significance, but giving a good chance to watch the development of the various teams will be Brown-Trinity at Providence, Dartmouth-Lebanon Valley at Hanover, Fordham-Western Maryland at New York, Holy Cross-Bates at Worcester, Oregon Aggies-Idaho at Corvallis, Penn State-Bucknell at State College, Syracuse-Ohio University at Syracuse, Chicago-Carleton at Chicago, Georgia-Clemson at Athens, Illinois-Kansas at Urbana, Michigan-Case at Ann Arbor, Nebraska-Drake at Nebraska, Pittsburgh-Westminster at Pittsburgh, Wisconsin-Lawrence at Madison, Washington & Jefferson-West Virginia Wesleyan at Washington, Williams-Union at Williamstown, and a freshman contest between Exeter and Penn Freshmen at Exeter.

To go over the prospects, Brown and Trinity played a tie game, neither side scoring, last year. Columbia did not play Hamilton, but the latter put up some pretty fair games, defeating Rochester and holding Union to a 0 to 0 tie, but being defeated by New York University, 21 to 13, whereas Columbia defeated New York University, 19 to 16.

Dartmouth did not play Lebanon Valley last year, but this team defeated Bucknell, 3 to 0; played a tie game with the Indians, but was beaten by Penn State, 13 to 0. Harvard did not play Tufts last year, but they did the year before and only managed to win the game by a score of 13 to 6.

LAFAYETTE IS DANGEROUS.

Tufts was, however, not so strong in 1915 as in 1914. Lafayette defeated Swarthmore last year, 17 to 0, and if Crowell has his forward passing going and is willing to use it with Welden shooting the ball, Swarthmore will find themselves in difficulty from the outset. Penn State did not play Bucknell last year, but they defeated the University of Pennsylvania, 13 to 3, while Bucknell was defeated by Syracuse, 6 to 0, and Cornell, 41 to 6.

It is true Bucknell improved very much toward the end of the season, holding the Navy to a 13 to 3 score, so that there is a chance that they may put up some opposition to Penn State, North Carolina A. & M., Princeton's opponents, beat the Navy last year, 14 to 12, but that was their best game. They were defeated by Georgetown, 28 to 0, but managed to score 13 points on Washington & Lee, while the latter was scoring 45.

The Army did not play Washington & Lee, but the latter played Cornell, and that, too, toward the end of the season, and Washington & Lee gave them a big score by running up 21 points. Cornell eventually won, however, 40 to 21.

LOOK FOR BULKY SCORES.

Washington & Lee also beat Virginia Poly, 13 to 0, and the North Carolina Aggies, 53 to 13, so they have some scoring possibilities, at least. Georgetown beat the Naval Academy team last year, 9 to 6, and they are looking forward to having a chance to do it again.

Georgetown also gave them a stiff game at Princeton and defeated them, 13 to 0, and held the Army down to 10 to 0, besides defeating teams like North Carolina, 53 to 0, and Fordham 33 to 7. So they are liable to give the "Middies" a stiff proposition.

Clemson was beaten by the University of Georgia last year, 12 to 0. They played some other close games, holding the University of North Carolina down to a score of 9 to 7, and Virginia Military Institute down to 6 to 3, but losing both games.

Illinois did not play Kansas last year, but if their team equals that of last season, it should be the favorite. Case School of Cleveland always plays an early opening game with Michigan, and is usually defeated, although the score is sometimes very close.

WANTS DECISIVE WIN.

Last year Michigan won, 14 to 3. The game between Pennsylvania and Franklin-Marshall last year was a close, hard game, Pennsylvania winning, 10 to 6, but Pottsville means to make the thing more decisive this year. Pittsburgh has an opening game, usually with Westminster, and it is an easy thing for Warner's pupils, as it will likely prove to be this year. The same is true of the University of Wisconsin-Lawrence game, Wisconsin being altogether too strong for them.

Washington & Jefferson had a hard game with West Virginia-Wesleyan last year, winning by the bare margin of 7 to 3, so this will give us a chance to test out Sol Metzger's coaching. Williams was beaten by Union, 14 to 0, last year.

In fact, it was a terrible season for Williams. She lost every game with the exception of the first. This year Brooks means to make a different story of it, but whether he can get going early is a question. Virginia defeated Tufts last year, 10 to 0, which was the first revelation of the weakness later to be displayed by the New Haven eleven, and this game is really the first on this year's card to test out whether Yale is going to "come back" or not.

SPEARS AND EGG IN FRONT AT NEWARK

Newark, N. J., Oct. 6.—Bob Spears and Oscar Egg shared honors at the Velodrome. Spears won the Velodrome championship, a one-mile open race, and also beat Marcel Dupuy, the French crack, in the Brassard race, a one-mile match.

Egg was the popular hero of the day because of his victory over Reggie McNamara in the ten-mile tandem paced race.

GULLIVER TO HELP COACH AMHERST

Amherst, Oct. 3.—Jim Gulliver, as old University of Maine guard, will be in Amherst this Fall to assist Coach Reilly in whipping the Amherst eleven into shape. Gulliver played at guard four years for Maine and was an all-Maine selection for three. Bill Tow, the Amherst quarterback of last year, has also returned to assist in coaching.

Expert Fullerton Figures Catchers in Ninth Article

HUGH FULLERTON, the celebrated baseball statistician, will compare the catchers who may take part in the World's Series, in the ninth of his expert articles on the big title clash, which will appear exclusively in tomorrow's Boston American.

Fullerton's stories on the World's Series are written from the viewpoint of an expert and show how the great title series will probably be won and lost. Get the Fullerton habit. If you are not already reading this great series of baseball articles, start with the story about the catchers, which will appear tomorrow.

Nine Veterans on Tufts Eleven

With the Harvard game less than a week away, football "fans" are anxiously speculating on what kind of eleven Tufts is going to turn out this Fall.

Nine of the men are veterans. Captain Westcott is in the best condition he has been since he joined the team, and if he escapes injury will undoubtedly be in a class with the best halfbacks in college circles at the end of the season; "Dinger" Doane and Mitchell, the other two members of the "Big Three," with Drummey at the helm, ought to make the strongest combination for advancing the ball that ever played at Tufts.

The ends will be taken care of by Sanborn and Jochim, both fast, rangy men of the type necessary to take care of the long forward passes that feature Tufts' game. The centre of the line will be taken care of by three 200-pound hunkies, Pryor being the pivot man, with Morrison and Alger taking care of things to his right and left respectively. As yet only one tackle is a safe bet, Beacham, last season's second string man. Hagerty, the old Holy Cross star, seems to have the call on the conditions for the other tackle position, but Abbott is giving him a close run.

Jacques' Work at Full Suits Yale

New Haven, Oct. 2.—Although Yale did considerable fumbling in the Carnegie Tech game, the coaches in general are pleased with the work of the team and no immediate changes in the lineup are expected.

Halfback Bingham suffered the only accident, bruising his nose, but he will return to the eleven before the end of the week.

Centre Voris will resume practice today, it is believed. Zenner is able to return to the team and will probably be in the varsity lineup at right guard.

Chester La Roche, substitute quarterback; Emil Jacques, fullback, and Howard Baldridge, right tackle, made the best showing of the candidates who were not regulars last Fall.

HAMMER TO BOX LEONARD

Kansas City, Mo., Oct. 2.—Ever Hammer, the club's young Chicago lightweight, and Benny Leonard of New York have signed to meet in a fifteen-round bout at Convention Hall, October 18.

CHICAGO CITY SERIES.

Chicago, Oct. 2.—The White Sox and Cubs have booked a Fall series and the first game will be played Wednesday. The National Commission will handle the games.

B. C. GRIDIRON STAR TAKEN ILL ON TRIP

Jack Sullivan of East Boston, Boston Colleges crack centre, was taken suddenly ill upon the eleven's arrival at Hanover, N. H., Saturday morning for its game with Dartmouth. He was removed to the Mary Hitchcock Hospital and operated on late Saturday night for appendicitis. Sullivan this morning was reported as resting comfortably.

Army Biff Title Won by Ninth

By BERT FORD.

El Paso, Tex., Oct. 2.—Johnny Cone, the South End pugilist, member of Company F, Ninth Regiment, won the 135-pound championship of the United States Army when he defeated Muskoff of the Seventh Infantry (Regulars) in the third round of what was to have been a ten-round bout. It was a return match and filled the Camp Cotton arena with militiamen and regulars.

Labor Day night Cone fought Muskoff without undergoing any training and shaded him, but their set-to was called a draw. This time Cone's style and "pep" surprised even the backers of Muskoff. In the first round Cone floored and nearly finished Muskoff with a right to the jaw, to the second Muskoff had Cone on the defensive.

In the third Cone let loose. He countered and jabbed Muskoff almost at will and literally beat him to the floor, Muskoff going down for the count after less than five minutes of fighting.

Cone has become the favorite of the border as the result of his two clashes with Muskoff and is in receipt of several tempting offers to fight in this section.

Harvard Men Improve Casey Is Real Fighter

The Harvard football team of today is in the same stage of development as other Crimson teams have been at this time in other years, Coach Leary is priming his eleven for the big games by a slow but sure process.

The season's success will depend largely on the quality and courage of the men themselves who are to form the final eleven, for they will receive the necessary instruction to the last word and will go into the big games equipped with every bit of knowledge they should have to win football games.

The Harvard line appeared much more formidable than it did against Colby, the forwards played low and charged fiercely, and above all they moved well together. Harte and Plumer gave an excellent account of themselves on the wings.

FUMBLING ONE OF FAULTS.

Harvard's faults consisted largely of a couple of fumbles, one at two debatable plays and uncertain kicking after touchdowns had been scored.

Flower, the light Crimson halfback, continued to distinguish himself. Hates, in its rounded rushes Saturday, gained but a few yards more than the light-haired Kansan. He displayed uncanny speed, a fine change of pace, and rushed back a couple of kicks in true Mahan style. As for punting, Flower has yet to show any startling kicks, but he is young in the game and under the coaching of Felton and Sprague should develop fast.

Casey, like Flower, is also short on weight. His playing Saturday was a sensation. Fight was his middle name. He was deep in the midst of every rush. Twenty pounds heavier and Casey would be able to hold his own with any back in the colleges.

A Girl and a Man

Agnes Is Sent Home Early and Receives a Box of Flowers with Bainbridge's Card.

By Virginia Terhune van de Water

CHAPTER XXXVII.

Copyright, 1916, by Star Company.

A week passed uneventfully. Agnes often caught herself wondering at the facility with which she adapted herself to Mr. Bainbridge's ways. Indeed, except that his dictation was more rapid than that of his partner, she saw little difference between his methods and those of her regular employer.

At least during working periods this was the case. But at such times as business did not press, she appreciated that there was a vast difference between the older and younger members of the firm. For instead of the brusque, almost stern manner of William Hale, she was conscious of a gentle consideration on the part of Hasbrook Bainbridge.

She realized this especially one afternoon in early August, when, at half-past four, Bainbridge finished signing the letters she had typed.

"Why do you stay any longer now, Miss Morley?" he asked her. "Since your work here is all done, isn't there something outside or at home that you would like to attend to?"

She glanced up gratefully. It was as if he had read her thoughts, and she spoke impulsively.

"How did you suspect that I was just wishing I could get away a little earlier than usual, and that I have been worrying all day?" she asked.

He smiled. "Perhaps I am not so much absorbed in business as not to take time to read you, child. And you have looked anxious today."

Mr. Hale would never have noticed how she looked. This man's kindness moved her to speak frankly of her own affairs.

"Mr. Hale is not well," she explained. "And just before I came away this morning, she had one of her bad turns. She had come around all right when I left her—but I confess I have been worrying a little."

"Of course, you have!" he exclaimed. "She is the relative you make your home with?"

AGNES IS CONFIDENTIAL

"The only living relative I have," she told him.

She began to gather up her papers and pencils. Just now she could say no more. Nor did she raise her eyes when a few minutes later, Bainbridge spoke.

"Poor, lonely child," he murmured as if to himself. Then, louder, "Go right home now. I hope you will find all well when you get there. You have a telephone, haven't you?"

"No. Why?"

"I was just thinking that you might like to call up now and ask how the invalid is progressing."

"Oh, I will be with her soon—thanks to you!" Agnes said.

She had remained her self-control and was smiling brightly at the man, who stood looking down solicitously upon her.

"You don't get recreation enough," he began. "Perhaps some evening——"

He stopped abruptly as the door into the outer office opened. And, as he saw Philip Hale standing there, he moved away from the girl. She, startled by the sudden interruption and by the sight of the young man, flushed, and, in her turn, stepped back hastily. To the casual observer, the actions of the pair might have seemed significant.

"I beg your pardon!" said Philip Hale. "I am sorry to intrude—but I have just received a letter from my father containing a message for you, Mr. Bainbridge. Here it is."

He threw a letter down upon the desk, and started toward the door.

"Wait a minute," Bainbridge suggested, "and I will read the message."

"You may read the entire letter if you like," Phil said curtly. "There is nothing confidential in it. Good afternoon!"

With a nod, he was gone. Bainbridge laughed softly as if amused at the behavior of a child.

BAINBRIDGE AMUSED

"Our young man is evidently miffed about something," he observed. "Do you know what's the matter with him?"

"I know nothing of Mr. Philip Hale's affairs," the girl said.

Yet inwardly her heart was aching because of the look of pain on Phil's face. He had grown thinner of late, and today there had been an imploring, questioning look in his eyes as they met hers for an instant. The look set the old wound to throbbing. If she only need not see him!

"Yes, you ought to have some recreation," Bainbridge resumed. "Some evening I shall insist on your going to dinner with me."

"Thank you!" she rejoined. "But I seldom go out in the evening."

"You must!" he exclaimed. "You need not stay late, and the change will do you good."

She only smiled and took her departure. Yet what he had said lingered in her mind. Life was so dull, what harm could there be in her taking an occasional pleasure? And she wanted to forget Phil.

She found Miss Lucy looking quite herself again when she reached home. An hour after her arrival a great box was left at the apartment for Miss Agnes Morley. It bore the name of the fashionable florist whose imprint had been on that other box she had received several weeks ago. With unsteady hands, she lifted the top.

In the centre of a mass of roses was an envelope containing a card. On this was written: "Just a bit of brightness for a tired, lonely girl." The initials signed were "H. B."

"Oh," she whispered as she lifted the gorgeous blossoms from their wrappings, "then it was Mr. Bainbridge who sent me those other flowers! I might have guessed, for yet I never once thought of it! He is right. I am lonely. He is very, very kind to me—kinder than any one else!"

(To Be Continued.)

Couldn't Carry More

"How many shoes shall I put on?" asked the wielder of the hammar, surveying the sorry-looking steed which had just been brought in to be shod.

"Four, of course," said the animal's owner; adding, slowly, "if you think he's worth it."

The smith put two shoes in place and then stopped.

"Mind you," he said, warningly, to the proud owner of the ruins curiously, "I ain't goin' to say as your was ain't worth another couple o' shoes, but I'm certain sure as he's got as many as he can carry away."

On the Limited

By NELL BRINKLEY

Copyright, 1916, by International News Service.

I LOOKED up and down the long coach and this is what I saw:

In one corner was curled a girl—a black head burrowed into a white pillow the porter had bestowed, high laced boots tucked against the pipes, eyelids shut down fast over gone-away mind and down on the lovely world that sailed by outside with so many things in it! Her curtain was pulled all green and sullen! She was in a very small corner of the world and she didn't care a bit to see out. You see, we're hardly ever in a very big place. We dream of the sea and the great blue plain of it; we wish for the tip-top of the Rockies. But it's far apart times that we ever stand where the world unrolls before us and there is no corner at all, at all. But some of us manage to see out of the particular little place we must be in.

In another corner was another girl—alert and erect. Don't say "she hadn't ever been any place"—because there are heaps of us, thanks to the Gods of Enthusiasm, who still look out of a trolley window and all up and down it, no matter how many times we've been whizzed up ad down it; who still like ANY show, good or bad, for the artlosity that is in us; who are bored only when an elderly purser writes us eight letters a day!

Besides, the girl with hands on the window sill and tip-toe eyes was an old traveler, because she was traveling light, and scanty, her hat was no bigger than a cake box from the bakery and could be tucked away anywhere, she could dress in her berth and come out like a French buttonhole rosegay, and she knew how to tip.

But she saw every cloud that moved by in the blue sky outside; she leaned to look at every child face turned up at the flying station; she smiled at the gran'pas and waved at the babies. Her curtain was high and whatever the flying world had to say, river and green hill and gentle valley, she heard every call; no spread of its beauty was shaken out in vain; her wide-open eyes were trying their best to "get" every idea and hue in the world she hurried through.

We are that way about life; some of us roll our curtain down tight as we sail through, shut our eyes fast and see neither storm nor sun nor laughter nor tears nor just things to think about, that we're flying through all the time. Other traths slip by with eager faces looking back at us, and we never even see. Others of us, the Blessed Crowd, who have to die by far too soon, snap our curtain high the minute we start on our baby trip, and after that we read the flying pages greedily, every one, sighing over the vanishing shapes of things we missed because we had but two eyes and one heart and head, jealous of the things that we will never have seen when the journey is done!

You just try having your curtain up and you'll see heaps to think about.

In Our Very Wonderful World

It has been wisely remarked that an ancient universal belief is not to be ignored; odd numbers have always and everywhere been held in peculiar reverence, and if that is mere superstition, then it only proves that, despite our civilization, we are still superstitious. A ban is always given an odd number of eggs to be hatched. Why? There is no reason at all, except superstition.

Salutes from warships, forts, etc., are always given in odd numbers, yet no valid reason can be adduced. It is a remnant of the old "odd numbers are lucky" superstition.

Virgil records all sorts of charms and spells practiced round odd numbers—never even ones. Seven is the favorite Biblical number, and old divines taught that it held a mystical perfection. It is an odd number.

Falstaff in the "Merry Wives" is entrapped for the third time. He himself said, "They say there is a divinity in odd numbers," because of the old belief in odd numbers.

Physicians of other days always insisted that "bleedings" should be in odd numbers—one, three five, etc., and never an even one.

Old English cookery was astonishingly lavish. Yorkshire cooks, for instance, seemed to fling about dozens of eggs and pints of cream. A favorite pie to send to one's friends at Christmas was made like this: Bake a turkey and bone it; take a goose and bone it, and so on with a chicken, a pheasant, a partridge, a pigeon, and a lark; then put the lark in the pigeon, the pigeon in the partridge, the partridge in the pheasant, the pheasant in the chicken, the chicken in the goose, and the goose in the turkey. The turkey should then be placed in a dish with a couple of hares to fill up the crevices, and six pounds of fresh butter, covered and cooked. The recipe said this was "an agreeable pie to eat cold."

"Who is that?" he asked, nervously, as he heard a footstep in the hall.

"Only papa," she whispered.

He moved about uneasily.

"Don't be afraid," she murmured; "you can surely trust papa."

"I don't know," he said, doubtfully.

"Oh, Arthur!" she cried, throwing her arms about his neck, appallingly. "you certainly ought to; nobody else in town will."

"Play Ball"

By Beatrice Fairfax

YOU want to be benefit at the Polo Grounds on the 10th of September, if you were in New York that day, didn't you?—or wanted to go? Anyway, you read about it and you know the Giants won in the last inning.

But you don't know how they won or why, even if you are a real fan and can tell an error before the umpire does and remember that Charlie Leonard was the best bunter in the College League a decade ago.

The benefit game was won by Jimmy Barton of the New York Evening Journal—even if he and I are the only ones who think so.

Eighteen thousand of you were there. I feel grateful to every one of you, for whatever reason you went. You were there—or wanted to be—and that makes friends for our fund and pays the rent for families that might otherwise be dispossessed on the very coldest days of next Winter.

You see homes are beautiful, sacred places to me, and I feel the man—the big man—back of this work is about the best friend the poor people have. I wonder if a certain little mother over in Brooklyn whose husband's pay as a motorman could not keep her and the five kiddies housed and fed last December, does not agree with me? I wonder if thousands of "little mothers" do not agree. I wonder if . . . . but that, as a few people beside Kipling have said, is another story.

You want to hear how the Giants won the ball game. You are thinking of McGraw, the giant of Giants, who goes after clean, honest victory and gets it. He is a great manager—McGraw.

So three cheers for him and the Giants.

The Girl on the Player's Bench

And now for Jimmy—here is your chance to do a little cheering for him—the cheering you would have done at the Polo rounds if you had been possessed of powers of divination to tell you who had won the game, for this is Jimmy Barton's story. He is the hero and general manager of Cupid's messenger of this tale.

Did your glance stray over toward the stand just back of the players' bench—or were you too intent on the diamond to be looking about for other flashes of interest?

There was a girl over there just back of the players that was as well worth watching as the game itself—young, vibrant with life, stars a-sparkle in her blue eyes, emotion flushing color in her magnolia petal face—but what can I do with words! Nature fitted that girl's face and chiselled its outlines, and when Nature does her best, why bother the typesetter?

The girl came in late—very late, and Jimmy and I were with her—Jimmy and I and one other, all crowded into Mrs. Arthur's roadster, loaned me for the day.

The girl was—but why antici pate? For without the girl and the one other and the villain of the piece, it would not have been necessary for Jimmy to win the Giants' game for them.

They generally manage that pretty well themselves, with a little help from that "one other" who is known to all faithful fans as Bert Kerrigan, star pitcher of the National League.

And now, before "the suspensive element" delays our story beyond the span of its life, let me introduce you to a fairly familiar figure: Miss Beatrice Fairfax at work at her desk—myself in my office.

To me there enters another old friend, Jimmy Barton, of the unquenchable good spirits; the "don't-whimper" philosophy of life; the "Never-acknowledge-defeat" vigor; the "I-love-them-all" attitude toward women—and the grin as unfading as the Cheshire Cat's, and much more attractive.

Jimmy Is Bankrupt

Jimmy was looking doleful—positively doleful. He was as overcast as the proverbial November day. Of course, I knew he was not love-lorn—but even though his woes lay outside my department, I felt a stir of sympathy and asked him what was bending his young head in sorrow.

"Don't be facetious at my expense! I'm in real trouble—financial difficulty—I face bankruptcy for a week."

"Granny will feed you."

"Yes, but Granny cannot feed all the other chaps who are going to be done out of a week's wages or more. Just study this headline on the sporting page for a minute."

I read: "O'Day offers two to one on the Yanks."

"Who is O'Day?"

"I fear every office boy in the place could tell you, more's the shame! Martin O'Day is New York's most daring gambler.

"He is also a district boss, saloon keeper, sport—and, in my opinion, a crook. He bets on 'sure things.' He is a pernicious influence in the world of sport. If ever I uncover him, athletics in our city will be a little more sanitary."

"In your own language: 'Go to it.' He is not an assignment on which you have failed?"

"No—but he seems to have a grudge against me! You see, he is the king of the betting ring. He only pays two to one when he is SURE, and I have a week's salary on the Giants!"

I might have delivered a sermon on the evils of betting, but instead I laughed. A doleful Jimmy seemed so miscast in his part.

But when my office boy, Arnold, came in and, breaking all rules, ushered in one of the prettiest girls I have ever seen, and when promptly thereafter J. B. made a graceful but determined exit, I knew he was not his normal self.

"The girl was so pretty that Arnold's eyes telegraphed a message which clearly said: 'Now, Miss Fairfax, tell me how is any fellow going to know how what she's got her heart set on? You wouldn't expect me to go slamming doors in her face, would you, Miss Fairfax?'

That is how pretty she was! And still Jimmy fled!

So I dismissed him from my mind as he had dismissed himself from the office, and turned to the girl.

She flung her story at me breathlessly, without beginning or middle.

"Oh, Miss Fairfax, don't be cross with the boy for letting me in. He couldn't stop me. I had to see you. I was so happy only yesterday. And I'm so unhappy today. I was so proud, too, because Bert, with all the world to choose from, took me. Now I am afraid he is tired of me; maybe that is why I got the letter. But I did love him so and now the letter says——"

"Letters are my specialty. Suppose you let me see yours so the story you are telling me will be a trifle clearer," I interrupted.

And straightway the letter was produced. On a crumpled piece of cheap paper this message was scrawled:

"Miss Malone: Your baseball playing lover has another girl. If you doubt it, watch at the Wilton inn tomorrow morning at nine o'clock. A friend."

An anonymous letter! Despicable refuge of evil-intentioned mischief makers; poisoned weapon of grinning malice, sure means to heartache and doubt! Was there ever a more thorny hedge of hate behind which the snipers of bitterness might skulk and pick off their unguarded victims?

"I don't want to spy on Bert, but I can't bear to have him think he is held if he wants to be free of me.....And we had the dining-room furniture picked out!" sobbed the girl.

I tried to reassure her. "Well, I hope some day you will invite me to lunch off the dining room table. We will have to rise above this letter. Maybe it is some silly joksster who sent it; in that case don't let him have the joy of laughing at your misery.

"If it was meant to make you suspect your lover, just prove your faith either by forgetting it entirely or by showing it to him and assuring him that it had no effect on you. Anonymous letters are generally as untruthful as they are cowardly, Miss——. Why, you are almost anonymous yourself!"

"I did forget to introduce myself!" laughed the girl. "Well, I'm no one in particular—just Rita Malone, very much at your service. But my boy is a celebrity. He is Bert Kerrigan, star pitcher of the Giants. May I introduce you to him at the Polo Grounds tomorrow?"

But it was not at the Polo Grounds I met Bert Kerrigan!

Economy

Jones Brown is rich and stingy. An acquaintance of his met Brown's son the other day.

"Your father seems to have lost a good deal of money lately. The last time I saw him he was complaining and saying he must economize."

"Economize? Did he say where he was going to begin?"

"Yes; on his table, he said."

"Then he must be going to take away the tablecloth," was the Blitz declaration.

PRESIDENT IS DENOUNCED BY IRISH

New York, Oct. 2.—Irish-American circles today are interestedly discussing the situation that has grown out of the telegrams sent to President Wilson by Jeremiah J. O'Leary and the President's answer thereto, and the significance thereof was shown at a meeting last night when fifteen hundred Irish-Americans gathered in the Garden Theatre and uproariously denounced President Woodrow Wilson for his scathing attack upon O'Leary, as a "disloyal" citizen.

More would have joined in the applause which greeted the defenders of Mr. O'Leary, but fire prevention laws prohibited their entrance into the theatre.

The meeting was not held for the purpose of arraigning the President. It had been arranged a week ago as a forerunner of the great Irish relief fund bazaar to be held in Madison Square Garden October 14 to 22. The proceeds will go toward the relief of the destitute families and orphans of the Irish patriots who were killed or imprisoned by England for daring to fight for the freedom of Ireland.

RESENT INSINUATION.

Peter Golden, the Irish poet, whose works are familiar to every Irishman throughout the world, led in the defence of O'Leary and his "disloyal" friends.

It was evident from the manner in which the vast audience took up the cudgels for O'Leary that they interpreted the President's statement of O'Leary's "disloyal friends" to mean Irishmen, and they resented the insinuation.

"Irishmen stood by America in 1776," shouted Golden amid tumultuous applause. "We stood by America in 1812 when England tried to strangle the infant republic, and we stood by the republic when the English papers were calling Abraham Lincoln a baboon, and if danger comes again, no matter from what quarter, we will be found where we always have been found—in the front ranks—and we will not have to go on our knees begging for a pension from Andrew Carnegie."

"Hit him again, Pate," came wild cries from the audience, and the famous poet continued:

NO APOLOGIES.

"From all the American battlefields come the voices of the exiled Irish dead, and the exiled German dead, to deny that we would be disloyal to our country, and they tell us to tell the man who makes that insinuation, no matter how high his station in life may be, and no matter how low and contemptible his motives may be, that it is a lie that we are disloyal.

"Irishmen do not have to make any apologies for their conduct. We do not have to give any renewed pledge for our allegiance to American institutions," the speaker once more shouted, and the crowd went wild with applause.

Mr. Golden opened his address with appeals for the support of the banner. His denunciations of England came frequently and from his heart, and each time he scored England the Irish spirit of the audience asserted itself.

"There never has been a more conquered people than the Irish," he said, "and there never was a people who so stubbornly refused to remain down. We are still here after 750 years of English treachery, English perjury, English forgery and English assassination. We are still Irish rebels, we are still unconquered and still unconquerable. The Irish, after years of unparalleled oppression, have leaped forward again. England's only motive has been to exterminate the Irish.

SOURCE OF EVILS.

"The source of all Ireland's evils is the English connection, and we must get together and cut that connection."

A five-minute applause greeted Golden's prediction that when the great European war ends England "will be down in the ashes."

Alphonse B. Koelble, friend of Jeremiah O'Leary, who has no doubt that he was included in the President's attack upon "disloyal" citizens, told of his birth in the city of New York and his marriage to an O'Connor.

"The people of Irish and German ancestry in this country kept America out of the great war no matter whether a proud gentleman may boast that he did so," said Mr. Koelble, during his address.

A storm of hisses greeted the veiled allusion to President Wilson.

"But I do not call him disloyal," continued Koelble when the demand to subside, "because I differ with him. I do say that he is not a good American because he surrendered American rights to England in the Panama Canal case.

"Yet I love America at least as much as that distinguished gentleman. My family fought inside of the Union in the '60's while his family was fighting for the disruption of the Union."

PANDEMONIUM REIGNS.

Actual pandemonium reigned for several minutes following this statement by Koelble.

"When the present hysteria passes the great American people will remember who fought for the Union.

"Then pity be on the man who tried to array one part of our people against another."

Koelble scored Great Britain as the one great enemy of the United States and the one great enemy of Ireland.

"And I will fight that country, which has been my country's greatest enemy," he said, "until the last breath is gone. If that is treason, let the Tories of this country make the most of it."

John J. O'Leary, president of the banner, was chairman of the meeting. "No matter how dark the cause of Ireland looks," he said, "it is going to succeed. "Yet," he added with a smile, "while I talk about the Irish I am as true an American as has ever trod the streets of New York. No matter whether we are of Irish, German or Polish extraction, we have just as good a right to discuss public questions as those who come from English stock, and we are going to assert that right."

CHARGES OFFICIALS REFUSED TO PROSECUTE BOXING CLUB

The story of a fruitless attempt to induce Deputy Chief Neal of the State Police to prosecute alleged violations of the law by the Atlas Athletic Association, promoter of boxing bouts at Mechanics' Hall, was revealed today by Thomas H. Bates of No. 7 East Broadway street.

The elements of the story were:

1—Appeals by Bates to Governor Walsh, to Neal, to Attorney-General Attwill and to District Attorney Pelletier, urging them to move against the Atlas A. A.

2—Attempts to induce Bates to cease his complaints, and when these failed, attempts to frighten him into silence.

3—The complete failure of his efforts to induce the prosecuting officials to act against the boxing promoters.

Charles H. Innes, the Back Bay man who with Jake Wardwell—according to Matthew Hale, Progressive leader—is in absolute control of the State Legislature, has acted as attorney for the boxing promoters. He denied today, however, that his business had ever been mixed in the Legislature in their behalf, or that he had ever attempted to restrain Neal from moving against them.

Bates told a striking story of his attempts to arouse the authorities against the boxing promoters.

SAME GROUP OF MEN.

"The boxing bouts were first conducted by the Armory A. A. some years ago, when the association moved to the Arena, they secured a new charter as the Atlas A. A. The same group of men, with one exception, holds both charters. Last Winter, they ran at the Atlas A. A. This Winter they are holding one under the Armory A. A. charter.

"Mr. Bates was formerly prominent in the Watch and Ward Society. He has been active in other civic movements. Some years ago in a two-year-old son by its remarkable feats of strength won the nickname of 'the baby Hercules.'

He told the story of his vain attempt to induce the prosecuting officers to move against the boxing promoters after quoting the Massachusetts law on boxing.

"That law provides that any promoter of bouts accessible to the public or at which fighters receive money or prizes shall be liable to a fine of $200 and three months' imprisonment.

The law, Mr. Bates said, would hit the boxing bouts at the Arena. These bouts are accessible to the public, though the spectators, he said, must be nominally "members of this club." The membership is so large, he said, as to include practically everyone in Boston who would care to see a bout. And he added that the fighters, of course, receive money for their service.

"The old Armory A. A. and the Atlas A. A., as it was then," said Mr. Bates, "had for years been perfectly contented with the situation.

TELL OF "INFLUENCE."

"Other men interested in boxing told me that the Armory and the Atlas people used their influence to prevent the passage over a bill to legalize boxing in Massachusetts.

"They did not want other fight clubs in the city, it was claimed, and they were said to be confident they could continue to get their bouts by reason of their 'pull' with the authorities.

"I determined to make complaints on the ground that it was time to break the gift of the Governor that had secured on the State and city government.

"I proceeded to complain against the boxing promoters.

"A few days later a prominent Boston attorney came to me, and he asked me without any extra words, to drop the complaints. He said that if I did so he would see I got a season pass to the bouts.

"I told him that I could not be bribed into withdrawing my complaints. I said it was my duty to see that the boxing men had a tight grip on Boston, and that it was time to break it.

"He went away, and a few days later another lawyer came to me. He told me that men connected with the Atlas A. A. wished to meet me, and asked him to warn me to quit my complaints, or they would get me. I told him I would have done so," he said, "but he is in authority over the State police."

"I know that Governor Walsh did not favor the boxing promoters, and Bates was in here several times, and made several statements as to what the Governor was said I should do.

"I feel that the bouts conducted by Mr. Atlas Arena are a matter for the Boston police to handle. They have 2,800 officers, while I have here only seventeen, and we are busy all the time.

"However, had I received an order from the Governor, I would undoubtedly have acted.

"There is nothing to the charge that politics entered into the thing. Politicians never enters in this department. I realize that no one in the State, at the order of Governor Crane, some years ago.

"But this matter is all over now. I really don't remember much about it. I have given you rightly and I know the Governor did."

Charles H. Innes, attorney for the boxing men in the court fight, denied that he had taken a hand in the game at Beacon Hill.

"I never saw Mr Neal in regard to ignoring complaints against the club" he said today. "I have never been active in helping the promotion of the armory bouts through my legislative influence—if I have any."

Popular Everett Matron Gives a Glowing Endorsement for Plant Juice.

People everywhere have found great relief from stomach trouble, nervousness, weakness and debility through the use of Plant Juice. It builds up the body and strengthens it, clears the blood of all poisons and impurities, stimulates the liver into healthy action, corrects constipation, and clears the system of all malaria and biliousness. It instills new life and vigor, soothes the nerves, brightens the eyes and improves the complexion. Did it give results other than outlined, there would never be the demand and the universal satisfaction derived from Plant Juice. It does all and more than is claimed for it. Following is the signed testimonial which speaks for itself:

Miss Mabel Atwood

Mrs. Mary Held, who resides at No. 17 Pearl Street, Everett, and is well known socially, said:

"For years I have been troubled with my stomach; had indigestion, dyspepsia and gas. I was all run down, could not keep any solid food in my stomach as it would ferment and I would suffer awful pain after eating. I was so nervous I could not sleep at night, had headaches, was dizzy, and had such a weak feeling that I could hardly lie in bed. My circulation was so poor that I felt cold all the time. I was very much discouraged as I had tried so many different medicines in the course of three years. Your medicine, Plant Juice, was the only medicine that helped me, and has relieved me all right. I have no more trouble with my stomach since taking Plant Juice, no backache or pains of any kind, sleep well, and am giving it to my little boy, as he is a run-down condition.

The Plant Juice Man is at the Drug Department of the Boston Dispensary Store, where he is daily meeting the local public and introducing and explaining the merits of this remedy.—Advertisement.

Neal, I gathered that he felt it was so much as his job was worth to get mixed up in the boxing business because of the political influence of the promoters and their friends.

"After that I had been in to see him the first time, Neal said he was going to see the Governor in regard to a letter from the Governor asking him to investigate. I went back again several times but he had seen the Governor yet, but he said he hadn't, though he said he had tried to.

"MIGHT AS WELL QUIT."

"He kept letting the matter slide until after the election, when Governor Walsh was defeated, and finally I told him it seemed hopeless for me to get anything done, and that I might as well quit trying.

"Former Governor Walsh later conferred with Mr. Bates coming to the Governor and requested Deputy Chief Neal to investigate.

"Governor Walsh," Mr. Bates coming to me," said the former Governor. "I wrote a letter to Neal regarding the matter, but as he is sending this word by my secretary.

"I particularly expected that Neal would act on the complaints of Mr. Bates, but I never heard anything further in connection with it.

He was asked: "Do you believe politics had anything to do with Neal's failure to act?"

"Does he do anything in which there isn't politics in it?" he retorted.

Deputy Chief Neal of the State police admitted that Bates had come to him with a written complaint against the boxing promoters.

"Had I received a positive order from the Governor to close up the bouts, I would have done so," he said. "But he is in authority over the State police."

"I know that Governor Walsh did not favor the boxing promoters, and Bates was in here several times, and made several statements as to what the Governor was said I should do.

"I feel that the bouts conducted by Mr. Atlas Arena are a matter for the Boston police to handle. They have 2,800 officers, while I have here only seventeen, and we are busy all the time.

"However, had I received an order from the Governor, I would undoubtedly have acted.

"There is nothing to the charge that politics entered into the thing. Politicians never enters in this department. I realize that no one in the State, at the order of Governor Crane, some years ago.

"But this matter is all over now. I really don't remember much about it. I have given you rightly and I know the Governor did."

Charles H. Innes, attorney for the boxing men in the court fight, denied that he had taken a hand in the game at Beacon Hill.

"I never saw Mr Neal in regard to ignoring complaints against the club" he said today. "I have never been active in helping the promotion of the armory bouts through my legislative influence—if I have any."

MARKET GAINS AFTER SHARP SETBACK

On the New York Stock Exchange at noon were mixed, with gains outweighing losses, the market having improved after the sharp setback which followed a strong opening. The volume of business was the smallest in several days.

The market rallied again in steel and equipment stocks and a few railroads. A new high record was made for Norfolk & Western at 146, up 2¾ points.

United States Steel was again the leading speculative issue. Opening with a gain of a point to 118¾, this stock, after some profit-taking sales, dropped to 117 for a loss of ¾, but rebounded to 118¾.

Activity was noted in Republic Iron and Steel was evident, this stock selling down to 78, then rising to 80¾. Gains were made by Lackawanna Steel Car & Foundry 1¾, American Locomotive 1½, Baldwin Locomotive 1¼, Crucible Steel 1¼, Air Brake 1 and Crucible Steel 1.

There was pronounced strength in rails. Besides Norfolk & Western, Lehigh Valley was conspicuous with a gain of 2 points to 83¾, a new high price for the year. Traders were talking "bid for Lehigh."

The Plain Need of the Initiative and the Referendum

THE other day ex-Governor Walsh addressed a meeting at the Quincy House in behalf of the Initiative and Referendum. This meeting was presided over by former Speaker Joseph Walker and was attended by those who have enrolled themselves as volunteers to promote the adoption of the Initiative and Referendum in the coming constitutional convention.

Governor Walsh cited some personal experiences which he had as Governor and which confirmed him in the conviction that the most fundamental need of the Commonwealth was the Initiative and Referendum. He said, among other things:

"It would take me twenty-four hours to tell you all my experiences with the failures of the members of the Massachusetts Legislature to obey the public opinion of the State when clearly expressed, to heed the wishes of their constituents or the dictates of their own consciences. Time and again members of the Legislature told me that they knew that a certain measure was popular, that a majority of the people of the State believed in it and that they themselves thought that it was right, but that 'unfortunately' they were so circumstanced that they could not vote for it.

"Take the very last experience I had just before the Legislature adjourned. You know the question of taxation has agitated greatly in this Commonwealth for several years, that those who hold intangible assets, which cannot be and cannot easily be discovered, have been escaping taxation scandalously here for generations, while the man who owns a store, or a horse and wagon, or an automobile with which he transacts his business, or the house in which he lives and which he owns or hires, is obliged to pay taxes to the full amount of his tax, either directly on his tax bill or through his rent. These wealthy persons holding this intangible, invisible property in stocks and bonds of railroads and gas companies and electric light companies and banks organized an association through which they have been trying to obtain an amendment to the Constitution which would enable them to be taxed at the rate of three mills on a dollar on this invisible property, while you and I, who own a house or some other property that cannot be concealed, are obliged to pay at a rate all the way from fifteen to twenty-five mills on a dollar. Under our present Constitution, no discrimination between invisible property and visible property could be made until this last year, when these gentlemen succeeded in their plan.

"Their plan was to obtain by a constitutional amendment a right to levy a so-called income tax. The name income tax was deceptive, because this tax which they proposed and succeeded in getting, through fraud, did not allow the essential element of an income tax, which is the progressive increase of the rate according to the size of the income. Thus a man with an income of four thousand dollars does not have to pay so high a rate as the man with an income of eight thousand dollars, the tax being levied in proportion to the ability of the man to pay. The real taxation reformers, the men who really wanted to benefit the Commonwealth, wanted the word 'proportional' struck out of the Constitution. The tax dodgers wanted a special amendment which would allow tax dodging and nothing else.

"The Committee on Taxation was packed by this organization of rich tax dodgers. It was agreed solemnly that the special amendment and the general amendment should go hand in glove. They conferred with me, made their agreement and then went out, three-quarters of them, and betrayed their promise. Every one of them knew what he was doing and knew that what he was doing was wrong and a betrayal of the people of the State. This is representative government for you."

It was only three years ago that the Democratic candidates in the State election solemnly pledged themselves to oppose the Trolley Merger bill, which was to give the New Haven Railroad the control of the street railways in more than three-fourths of the area of the State. Yet over half of these Democrats, elected on this promise, published in every platform, deliberately voted in favor of giving the New Haven the street railways in spite of the experience which the State was having with the New Haven control of the Boston & Maine and other public utilities in New England and in spite of the protest of the Railroad Commission, in spite of Governor Foss' courageous veto of the bill, in spite of the protest of the Boston Chamber of Commerce, the largest business organization in the world, and of the Massachusetts Real Estate Exchange, and of every intelligent and honest man in the State.

Within the last three years, in five Representative districts, the people instructed on the ballot their representatives to vote for the Initiative and Referendum by majorities ranging from two to three to one, and the representatives from these districts paid absolutely no attention to their instructions, and one representative defied his instructions when more people in his district had voted for the Initiative and Referendum than voted for him.

As Governor Walsh says from his personal experience we shall never have a government for the people or by the people until we have the Initiative and Referendum.

The coming constitutional convention gives us the opportunity to obtain this great reform, and every honest and intelligent man who believes in our republic or who believes in a government by the people, who believes in social and economic and political equality, who understands that invisible government cannot perpetually rule the State without destroying it, will unite so to amend our Constitution in the coming constitutional convention as to give us the Initiative and Referendum.

If you do not know what the Initiative and Referendum means please write to the AMERICAN for literature.

"Help!" "Police!" "Assistance!" These perfectly proper and unobjectionable exclamations, which were uttered by Mortimer Monkeyface, Gaston de Gink and Ethelbert Eggnog, were answered from the deck of the low, black, rakish pirate ship by cries of "Tut-tut!" "Oh, hush!" "Fiddlesticks!" and other expressions constantly used by sea wolves. Our heroes had been put ashore on a cannibal island by their heartless captors. It wasn't right! But that's the way pirates act every time they get a chance. They're never happy unless they're pulling some strong-arm stuff or other. At this moment a number of exceedingly unattractive-looking savages approached, and after setting the lunch table began to do a walk-around, at the same time joining in the following glee or roundelay:

Bite, bite, bite; chew, chew, chew;
We thinkee white man makee bully stew!
Puttee him in kettle, cookee l. a day;
Servee him en casserole! Hip, hip, Hooray!"

The high cost of living does not bother cannibals. One hearty meal a month is all they want. Suddenly, without any previous notice whatever, a wild and piercing——

Some Hope for the Opium Habitue

By Woods Hutchinson, M. D.

The World's Best Known Writer on Medical Subjects.

ALL the bogies are vanishing into thin air nowadays. The deadly heat-born miasma, which hung like an invisible shroud over all the tropics and meant sure death to white men, has been resolved into two tiny, wiggling bugs—one carried by a mosquito, the other by dirty drinking water. And science knows the "spell" which will conjure them both out of existence. The grisly terrors of the midnight murk and the "goblins" that are liable to "git ye," with ghosts and all the other Powers of Darkness, have been resolved into a bad conscience or alcoholic hallucinations on the one hand, and hysterical females masquerading in white drapery on the other.

Even the Demon Rum is rapidly losing his grip since the great truth dawned upon us that if the working four-fifths of humanity are given decent food and good housing and plenty of sleep and both time and money for rational amusements—which they have never had in the history of the world before the last twenty years—they will not be one-fifth as likely to "take to drink" in order to make life tolerable. While at the same time the wonderful strides of science have made even business and everyday life really interesting and worth while and given the successful 10 per cent something better and more interesting in the way of amusement than fighting and drinking and running after the women. The small moiety of excessive and uncontrollable drinkers are simply mentally unbalanced and belong in an appropriate sanatorium.

And now we are beginning boldly to talk about curing the opium eater. No longer is he the wretched victim of a slavery worse than death, of a mysterious lifelong obsession from which death only can release him. He is just suffering from a chronic toxic absorption—like lead poisoning or gout. Stop the absorption and the "habit" will stop.

As we have already seen, the allure of opium has been enormously exaggerated, and there is very little that is actively or positively attractive about it. Its first effects are a bitter taste in the mouth, a drowsy, stupid feeling, and sleep, followed by a racking headache; a dry mouth, a clammy skin, a nauseated stomach and tightly locked bowels. Its only attraction is that it will stop pain and relieve discomfort, if present. The boasted rosy dreams and golden visions of opium-eating come only from the pipe, which, as we have seen, carries over almost no opium or morphine and exist chiefly in the imagination of the smoker. "Pipe dream" is the proper name for them in more senses than one.

Whence follows the important practical conclusion: No persistent pain, no opium habit. It is the deliberate opinion of those who have had widest experience with this condition that almost anyone, who, for any cause, real or imaginary, intentional or unintentional, took opium two or three times a day for three weeks or more might develop the opium habit, so-called, and that to a degree which he might find a good deal of difficulty in breaking off unaided. And this entirely apart from any weakness of will or special fascination, or mental defect on his part. And yet there is nothing attractive about the effects of opium, except in so far as it relieves pain. Where does the pain come from?

The answer to this gives the new point of view in regard to the opium habit. The pain that calls for the first dose or series of doses of opium may come from fifty different causes—a broken leg, an agonizing burn, an abscess, a torturing neuralgia. The pain which calls for the second dose of opium (and the hundredth and the thousandth) is due to the poisonous after-effects of the first dose. Take the patient under absolute control, stop the opium in the shortest period humanely possible, scour and flush the poisons of previous doses out of his system and you have broken the opium habit. And the confident statement is now made that in at least half, if not two-thirds of the cases, the craving will not return. The opium eater is not, strictly speaking, the victim of a habit; he simply suffers agonizing discomfort from the effects of opium previously taken, and to relieve these discomforts takes more opium. Stop the taking of opium long enough to get its poisons all out of the system and you stop the craving for the drug, because the patient no longer has any discomfort to be relieved.

Legend of Atlantis, the Sunken Continent, May Be a Fact

Garrett P. Serviss Explains That Plato's Imaginative Account of an Ideal Land May Have Been an Elaboration of Ancient Lore of a Land Now Submerged Under the Atlantic Ocean

By Garrett P. Serviss

"WHAT is the attitude of science regarding Atlantis? I do not mean simply the submerged continent, which is, I believe, generally conceded, but the Atlantis of Plato and Donnelly, the seat and centre of a high civilization.—C. C. M."

It is like the attitude of science regarding any other tradition which has no verifiable facts to support it. To concede the former existence of a habitable country in the midst of the Atlantic Ocean demands no extraordinary, or unjustifiable, credulity, because it has been demonstrated not only that broad regions of the earth's surface now submerged were once dry land, but also that on the bottom of the Atlantic lie the topographic features of what may fairly be called a sunken continent. The exact position and outlines of this lost land are matters still under discussion, but its existence can hardly be disputed.

Plato's Beautiful Land of Atlantis Is Hardly in Accord with Archaeology.

However, when we pass from this general admission of the former existence of an Atlantic continent to the particulars of Plato's legend of Atlantis we encounter something not accordant with scientific knowledge. Plato pictures Atlantis as a land brilliant with a civilization and art, surpassing even those of Greece.

He tells of splendid cities, of wise laws, of admirable social and political institutions, of great mechanical achievements, and other things utterly inconsistent with the physical and mental characteristics of the human race as archaeology has revealed that race to us during its earliest known existence upon the earth.

Plato's Atlantis was a kind of sophisticated Eden, but science has been unable to find any indications of a period in man's history when he was particularly suited to inhabit any kind of Eden except a savage one.

At the Time This Continent Sank, Man was Living in Trees or in Caves.

The tremendous catastrophe which the ancient legend says caused the sudden disappearance of Atlantis must have occurred ages before the chain of recorded history began to be linked up. Every fact gathered by science concerning early man consistently and persistently testifies that the farther we go back the lower was his condition, the more beast-like his form and the more animal-like his intelligence.

How, then, is it possible for science to accept the Platonic legend of Atlantis as the home of men superior even to the Greeks of the golden age of Athens? In view of all that science knows at present about this subject it would be more reasonable to affirm that the inhabitants of Atlantis lived in caves, or in trees, and possessed virtually no arts and but a low degree of intelligence.

If, on the contrary, they were what Plato pictured them, whence did they derive their civilization? This is a question that lies outside the fence of science, in the wild, flowery meadows of legend, where the butterflies of the imagination dazzle the eyes and confuse the reason with a maze of scintillant fancies.

And yet, it is from just such uncultivated wastes that the future fields of science must be redeemed, and some time we may get a trustworthy light on this very question, which now seems so insolvable. The suggestions of the imagination should never be thrown aside untested.

It has been suggested, for instance, that the legend of Atlantis, which Plato says he did not invent (and, indeed, we know he did not), was an original form of the story of the Flood, and that the Eden which the ancient scripture writers had dimly before their minds was situated on the island, or continent, of Atlantis.

With the submergence of Atlantis in consequence of a great earth throe, the race that had once inhabited Paradise disappeared, except a few survivors who reached the shores of Europe, as Europe then was.

Perhaps Much of Europe's Culture Came from the Survivors of Atlantis' Ruin.

Whether these supposed survivors encountered an autochthonous race of men in Europe, still in a savage state, with whom they mingled, or whether they found themselves alone in a new world, they introduced the seeds of change. It is a singular fact, worth recalling here, that, as far as we know, the earliest seats of human occupation in Europe were in Spain and southern France, the nearest land to the supposed site of the lost Atlantis.

Indistinctly we are able to trace the coming of a new and superior race among the valleys of the Pyrenees and of southwestern France, and some of the specimens of art and handiwork left by this race are of surprising excellence, although they do not indicate civilization in our sense. But the facial types and the size and shape of the skulls show an almost startling resemblance to those of today.

The practically world-wide prevalence of legends of a flood that almost destroyed mankind, the equally widespread traditions of former superior races, the stories heard by early American explorers of the mysterious visits by white men and wise men, coming no one knew from whence; these may all be connected with the Atlantis legend, and some time they may assume such a form and consistency that science will be able to handle them.
